We present, first, a frank, forward and vigorous line of observation from Sidney Kent, president of Fox Films, on what is box office, good pictures that are not box office, and, most poignantly, of temptations. Mr. Kent, as most of the motion picture world knows, is a big, husky, upstanding executive, who used to be an engineer and became in the motion picture business first a salesman, then a super-salesman and then that imposing institution known as a "major executive".

On the other hand—very much on the other hand—we have in hand a letter from our own J. C. Jenkins, exhibitor of Neligh, Nebraska, and most of the year out on the highways and byways in behalf of Motion Picture Herald. Mr. Jenkins has been in the business quite a spell, too. He is as itinerant and persistently smiling as Old Johnny Appleseed, and out where the West begins on a line that runs from Moose Jaw clear down into Sonora, "Jaysee" is the friend and confidant of most every exhibitor. They tell him and he tells the Herald.

Now for Mr. Kent's story. It seems that he sat down with Eric M. Knight, industriously keen observer of the screen for the Philadelphia Public Ledger, as was reported thus:

"You fellows," said Mr. Kent (meaning the critical fraternity), "believe that good films of mature ideas and box-office successes are the same thing. I just wish they were. You have a sort of idea that we movie moguls don't give a darn about making films. You picture us as amiable fools who can see nothing but cash. That isn't entirely fair.

"I won't go into my own record—but you can look it up for yourself. I've worried and worked to get before the public such films as 'Chang,' 'Grass' and 'Tabu.' I merely wish that the general public liked those films as much as we did.

"Our big problem today is to weather financial storms and to get the people to watch the best pictures. And it isn't easy. We produce a film like 'Cavalcade.' You newspaper chaps see the big business on 'Cavalcade' in the cities. Do you think 'Cavalcade' is burning up the rest of America? Outside of the big centers you haven't got any one who knows what a cavalcade is nor gives a hoot."

Anxious To Make Good Films

"But," Mr. Knight asked, "how is 'Cavalcade' going in Britain?" "Oh, breaking all records!" "How about Canada?" "Big Business in Canada!" "What about Australia?" "Oh, we'll do immense business there!" "What about New Zealand, South Africa, the Orient?" "Big—they'll do big business." "Then you'll make money from 'Cavalcade,' so what do you care who pays the money as long as some one does?"

"True," said Mr. Kent. "Let's admit then that 'Cavalcade' will make us money. It will. But that is an exceptional film in that it has great appeal abroad. Ordinarily we can't depend upon such a terrific foreign income. My point is that we're anxious to make good films—we try to make ones of importance—after they're finished we worry about taking in the expense. And the fact of this matter can't be attacked by any critic: if we make them too good we just watch them die in the smaller towns. It would make a stone man weep to see the way people won't watch some of the best films we turn out.

"Yet, we've got to put out the best films we know how and trust in the future. And so long as I'm with Fox we're going to go after quality. You consider such a film as 'Zoo in Budapest.' Have you seen it?"

"Yes—and I——"

"I know what you're going to say. You're ready to tell me that Lee Garmes did camera work there as beautiful as you've seen on the screen in years. You're going to tell me that it was, visually, almost the perfect type of screen romance of the light type. And what do you think people care about our camera work and our visual beauty? I care, you care, Jesse Lasky cares, Lee Garmes cares, maybe several thousand people in the large cities value it and react to it. But what does the man in the small-town theatre care? You know darn well he doesn't give two cents.

Calls Block Booking Best

"And, unfortunately, that's the bird we're selling to—the thousands of men that run small-town theatres.

"You hear groans and sighs against the block booking system—by which a producer signs a movie theatre man up to take product in a mass. Why, it's the finest system we have.

"Look here," said Mr. Kent, warming up to his subject, "there's a couple of theatre men sitting with us now and they'll tell you if I exaggerate. We make certain films that are of highest appeal. You critics go into ecstasies about them. The people in the cities praise them. And when we get to the small towns the theatre managers yell blue murder because they have to play them. They don't want to show the 'Cavalcades' and 'Grasses' and 'Tabus.' And if we didn't have block booking we'd never get our best films into above 5 per cent of the theatres in the country. I know what they'd do without block booking. They'd run sex fifty-two weeks in the year.

"Don't tell me about selling decent films Why man, we make a decent film like 'Cavalcade' or 'State Fair.' And then we sit down and watch a cheap piece of tripe about a woman of the streets like '——— ———' come and pack 'em in to standing room all over the country.

"Mind you, I am not excusing the horrible and blatant stuff that does come out. I am merely pointing out the enormous temptation there is for a motion picture company (especially in these times) to step out and make a bad film that will pack box offices."

Meanwhile out in Ashland, Wisconsin,—where one may suppose the fishing is rather good this time of year—our last letter overtook Mr. Jenkins, with an inquiry about what he seemed to find most on the minds of his exhibitor friends of this spring's travel. Mr. Jenkins took his pen in hand, evidently with a certain reluctance, but with a vast sincerity. So he wrote:

"To write you the conditions as I find them with reference to exhibitor reaction toward the production and distribution of pictures, I would have to speak rather frankly, and to speak frankly I might be taking a position that to you would seem radical.

"I doubt if there is a single exception to the universal complaint against dirty, salacious, suggestive pictures that the exhibitors are compellled to play under the block booking system. Wherever I go I meet up with the complaint that nasty pictures are driving people away from the theatres. On the other hand I find that good, clean, wholesome pictures are universally drawing good business.

Exhibitors Without Hope

"I also find that there is a unanimous belief among exhibitors that the 'Code of Ethics' is a camouflage intended only to deceive the public and with no serious intentions to clean up the screen. This is proven by the passing of such pictures as 'The Million Dollars Legs,' 'Follow Through,' 'So This Is Africa,' and others of like nature.

"It would seem that the constant agitation of exhibitors for clean pictures would eventually fall on some ears that would give some thought to the matter, but exhibitors have about given up hope.

"It is quite evident that pictures are being made with an eye singly to city patronage, and from this viewpoint perhaps the producers are correct, but from the small community viewpoint they are all wrong.

"Smutty dialogue and nasty suggestions, illicit love scenes and the like may get a 'kick' from city audiences but they are kickbacks from rural communities."

BABEL OF FILM FINDINGS IN NAME OF SCIENCE SCORED BY GOLDSMITH

Public Propaganda for Self-Centered Movements Abets Orgy of Surveys, Misusing Names, Says SMPE President

An "extraordinary babel" of so-called scientific findings on the psychology of motion picture entertainment, particularly on the child mind, with misuse of the names of leading educators and other public men and women to exploit those conclusions, is the result of an orgy of surveys, investigations and studies undertaken "to forward self-centered rather than altruistic and scientific movements," Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, president of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, declared in a paper presented before the New York Section Saturday.

Instead of following recognized procedure in scientific studies, procedure which would place the conclusions of investigators before a jury of their peers in the particular field, public propaganda has been substituted, said Dr. Goldsmith. And Dr. Goldsmith speaks as a Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, Fellow of the American Physical Society, and Fellow and Director of the Institute of Radio Engineers, as well as SMPE executive.

Schools' Prestige Misused

"Scientific research receives the doubtful credit for conclusions that could not possibly have been conceived in the scientific spirit," he said. "The prestige of leading universities and colleges of the country is being misused. A galaxy of 'names,' in the form of sponsoring committees for pseudo-scientific conclusions, is made to serve as the basis for fund-raising campaigns," while "the new style, apparently, is to have the findings interpreted weeks and even months before the real findings are published."

Dr. Goldsmith applied his point to a paper by Rev. W. H. Short, director, Motion Picture Research Council, which was read before the SMPE at its Spring Meeting, and "presumed to be a synopsis or general summary of an investigation of certain motion picture questions, carried out through support granted by the Payne Fund of Ohio."

Layman Summarizing Results

Discussing Rev. Short's paper in some detail, Dr. Goldsmith declared:

"The investigation is presented as having a scientific aim, and its results are to be given in a series of volumes shortly to be published. The authors of these volumes are assumed to be qualified scientists in the educational field. It is understood that Mr. Short, in presenting the results of their investigations for several months in advance of their publication or presentation to any competent scientific body, is acting as a layman summarizing and presenting the results and conclusions of a group of scientists.

"Having thus had our attention attracted to his recent presentation, reference was had to a sketch in 'Who's Who' about Mr. W. H. Short. This discloses that he is neither a doctor of science nor a doctor of medicine. He is a bachelor of divinity, according to that record. He was ordained a Congregationalist minister in 1897. He has been the secretary of various fund-raising campaigns directed towards the promotion of public movements. Finaly, he is listed as the author of a report called 'A Generation of Motion Pictures, 1928.' A study of that paper and its history became of interest."

"Collection of 'Horrors' "

Of that document, termed a "collection of 'horrors'" allegedly found on the screen practically since its inception, and based upon newspaper clippings, Dr. Goldsmith said:

"A newsaper item to the effect that several small children had to be taken from a hall exhibiting a Jack-in-the-Beanstalk picture, partly because the music played by the orchestra was so loud that it had unnerved them, forced the conclusion that 'Picture Realism Sends Tots Out Crying.' . . .

"It was such meat as this that was fed to psychological investigators in order that scientific conclusions might be drawn therefrom. But apparently Mr. Short's own committee did not consider this document sufficiently 'scientific' ever to authorize its open publication.

Other Fantastic Conclusions

"Further preliminary studies subsequently circulated declared that the reputation of movie children was very much lower than that of non-movie children. Yet in the very same breath the statement was made that movie children rated Protestant ministers and social workers higher than did non-movie goers!

"Again, movie children were named oftener as best friend, it was said, than non-movie children; movie children read more books, more magazines; they are more admired and more sociable than non-movie children. And yet all this is contradicted in this study by the conclusion that movie children stand lower in the eyes of their classmates.

"Worst of all, perhaps, is the discovery that the college professor stands lower than the popular actor in the eyes of movie children. To the question, 'Would you rather be a college professor or a popular actor?' most of the movie children said, we are told, 'A popular actor.' "

Even Pillow-Fights!

Dr. Goldsmith cited incidental matter from other so-called "preliminary studies," such as ten picture-going youngsters awakening at midnight to engage in a pillow-fight, sub-breathing supposedly induced by sitting humped up in a theatre, 100 Chicago children admitting that they bit their fingernails at the "movies."

Returning to Mr. Short, Dr. Goldsmith added:

"In Mr. Short's recent paper before this Society it is stated that a number of children were taken to motion picture theatres and after the performance their heart-beat rate was measured and the amount of movement (motility) during sleep was determined. It is stated that the heart-beats were accelerated and that the motility in sleep was increased. A number of puzzling questions, the answers to which do not appear in the paper, at once arise. Among these questions are:

"Precisely what problem was being investigated? Was it the effect of motion pictures on heart-beat or pulse rate and sleep motility? Or was it the beneficial or injurious effect of motion pictures on children? . . .

"And further, on physiological effects: Would not the prospect of a vacation trip, or of a 'treat' of ice cream or some other popular delicacy quicken the pulse and add to sleep motility? How about the effect of a new doll on a small girl, or of an Indian costume (complete with feathers and tomahawk) or a baseball bat and catcher's glove on a small boy?

What About Christmas?

"But suppose motion pictures do quicken the heart-beat?

"There is scarcely an activity of normal childhood that does not have the same result. Running to school, playing ball, cheering the school team to victory, thrilling to a patriotic appeal, playing cops and robbers—all of these usually stimulate heart action. Do children sleep entirely without motion on Christmas Eve, and is their pulse rate constant while enjoying their newly-acquired gifts on Christmas Day?

"Probably the widest survey of the influence of motion pictures on children is that included in the report of the British Commission on Educational and Cultural Films. That report sums up the investigations of a competent observer as follows:

" 'My general impression, after reading a fairly large mass of evidence carefully, is that there is no need for serious alarm. . . . These children at least seldom see anything on the films in which virtue and right are not merely ultimately, but immediately, triumphant; that is, at the end of twenty minutes. Evil, on the films, never pays.' "

MGM Gets Battery of New Sound and Film Printers

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has ordered a battery of the recently developed Bell & Howell automatic sound and picture film printers to be installed in the company's studios in Hollywood. The printer permits simultaneous printing of sound waves and picture records on talking motion picture films used in theatres, instead of printing sound and pictures separately.

Producers At Burbank Get Added Duties

The vacancy left recently by Darryl Zanuck when he resigned as a Warner production executive in Hollywood, to form his own company, will not be filled, declared Major Albert Warner, vice-president, when he stepped off the Chief at Kansas City late last week, while en route to New York from studio conferences on 1933-34 product.

"Zanuck's job has been eliminated and our other producers will pick up the loose ends he left," Major Warner explained. At the same time he announced Hal Wallis will take over more production responsibility, with William Koenig, Robert Lord, Robert R. Presnell and James Seymour completing the roster of executives at the Burbank studios.

Indicating he definitely wanted to clear up misconception in some quarters as to production authority and credit, Mr. Warner said: "Our pictures will be continued to be made by Jack Warner as vice-president and general manager in full charge of production, a position he has always held in the past."

Plans for next season, including expected number of pictures, quotas, sales policy and other data, will be divulged at the sales meeting, date for which is undecided, Mr. Warner declared. He intimated it was not necessary for Warner Bros. to rush production plans, as with its three Hollywood plants the company has facilities to make 100 features a year.

Others in the Warner party were A. W. Smith and Gradwell Sears, sales heads, and S. Charles Einfeld, advertising director.

Warner Bros.' plans for a branch in Honolulu to serve the Hawaiian Islands are being held in abeyance, pending Mr. Sears' return to the Coast in three weeks.

The company may send "one of the biggest boats ever built" on a circle of the continent via the Panama Canal as its next major exploitation move, declared Mr. Einfeld.

Loew Eliminates Exclusive Policy

After several months of experimentation in various key cities throughout the country, Loew's has decided to abandon the policy of exclusive runs. The order will take effect this week. Among the cities in which exclusives will be dropped are Kansas City, Providence, Akron and Dayton. The policy was given up some time ago by the company in Atlanta. Kansas City was the largest city in which exclusive runs have been tried out. The policy there was instituted last September, but not all the pictures shown during the first few weeks were exclusives.

It is understood that the chief reason for the action is that box office receipts did not jump to the expected peak. The Loew decision will apply to all Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and United Artists product, excepting Samuel Goldwyn releases, which have never been shown as exclusive runs.

WORLD'S FAIR AT OLD ROXY

With the slogan, "If you can't go to Chicago come to the Roxy," the original Roxy theatre in New York is celebrating a "World's Fair Week" beginning Friday. The playhouse is decorated for the occasion, and the lobby, rotunda and mezzanine foyers are crowded with scores of exhibits ranging from a complete miniature railroad to specimens of international handicrafts. More than 40 leading industrial corporations and commercial organizations have contributed displays, many of them miniatures of their exhibits at the "Century of Progress."

Beck Resigns From RKO Circuit Post

Martin Beck, one of the oldest vaudeville showmen, and founder of the Orpheum Circuit, resigned this week as managing director of vaudeville for the RKO circuit, effective June 9. An unofficial explanation of Mr. Beck's sudden decision was seen in the fact that, during the past year, vaudeville playing time has shrunk from 36 weeks to nine.

Mr. Beck succeeded Charles Freeman as head of the vaudeville department in February, 1932, during the preliminary preparations for the inauguration of the Music Hall and the RKO Roxy theatres. The post from which he has just resigned will be filled, at least temporarily, by Phil Reisman, head of the film booking department. While Mr. Beck has no immediate plans, it is understood he will go to Europe in August to complete several vaudeville deals pending since he and S. L. Rothafel were on the Continent last summer booking foreign talent for the elaborate stage presentations then p'anned for the Music Hall.

After a course in dramatic school in Vienna Mr. Beck came to America to accept his first job as an actor in a German stock company in New York. He interested the proprietor of a beer garden in Chicago in erecting a stage and put on an act. He engaged a soubrette and a comedian. The venture was so successful they invited him to conduct a music hall next door. From this successful experiment, he went to San Francisco in 1903 and conducted the first Orpheum Theatre which was the first of the many theatres of the Orpheum Circuit, which later became the Western wing of the far-flung Radio-Keith-Orpheum theatre system. To continue his association with the theatre after his retirement, seven years ago, he built the Martin Beck theatre in New York which is considered one of the finest and most complete legitimate theatres in New York. On January 1st, 1932, he joined RKO upon the invitation if its chief executives and the board of directors in an advisory capacity to make a survey of its interests. In March of this year, he accepted the post of managing director of RKO vaudeville, having under his jurisdiction the stage presentations in all RKO theatres.

Nathanson Named New President of Famous Canadian

N. L. Nathanson was elected president of Famous Players Canadian Corp. at the annual meeting in Toronto Wednesday. He succeeds Adolph Zukor, who was elected chairman of the board. Arthur Cohen, who succeeded Mr. Nathanson as managing director three years ago, is out of the corporation.

The sensation of the meeting was the dropping of I. W. Killam, of Montreal; George Bickel, of Toronto, and R. S. McLaughlin, of Ottawa, as directors. Mr. Bickel was vice-president of the corporation for many years and is a member of the Paramount shareholders' protective committee organized recently.

Mr. Killam broke off relations with Mr. Nathanson when the latter bargained with Gaumont-British for the sale of Famous Players. This led to Mr. Nathanson's resignation when Mr. Killam and Mr. Zukor opposed acceptance of the offer.

Mr. McLaughlin is president of General Motors of Canada and was one of the financial men who stepped into the directorate after Mr. Nathanson resigned.

The meeting Wednesday was postponed from the regular date last week.

With Mr. Nathanson's return to Famous Players announcement was made there would be no managing director. There was no vice-president elected at the meeting. The following additional directors also resigned: Arthur Cohen, J. B. Tudhope, of Orillia, and W. J. Sheppard of Waubashene.

The new board consists of President Nathanson, Sir William Wiseman of New York, Major Andrew Holt of Montreal, son of Sir Herbert Holt, who is financially important in Canada; Adolph Zukor, Hon. W. D. Ross of Toronto, Victor Ross, T. J. Bragg, R. Bolstad, J. J. Fitzgibbons and F. B. McCurdy of Halifax.

Mr. Bragg has been secretary-treasurer of the company. W. D. Ross resigned from the directorate when Mr. Nathanson stepped out and is now back. Victor Ross is a big oil man of Canada, while Mr. Bolstad was formerly comptroller of Famous Players under Nathanson. No information was divulged at the meeting regarding financial plans, but the company is said to be in good shape.

Additions in Sales and Publicity Made by U. A.

United Artists has made numerous additions to its sales force and publicity and advertising departments, in keeping with the increase in production plans for 1933-34. Karl Krug, formerly of the Pittsburgh Press and more recently doing regional publicity for United Artists in that district, was brought to the home office. Gertrude Smith resigned from Columbia to handle press books for Hal Horne, advertising chief. Leon Lee, formely of National Screen, joined the company for advertising promotion work, while Al Adams, formerly with Paramount and Columbia, is Monroe Greenthal's new assistant. Several other new appointments will be announced later.

Mr. Horne, accompanied by Ed Finney, leaves for the Coast June 20 to confer with United Artists producers. General sales manager Al Lichtman leaves for Hollywood shortly.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Paramount is now experimenting in directorial "teams." Max Marcin and Louis Gasnier were assigned to do "Gambling Ships." George Somnes and Alexander Hall are at work on "Midnight Club." Stuart Walker and Mitchell Leisen co-directed "The Eagle and the Hawk," a current release. Obviously this system is predicated on simple multiplication. The company hopes to make each picture doubly good. But, if by some chance, one production does not turn out as expected, two directors can divide the blame.

The suggestion of Mr. Hays and other industry leaders that Hollywood indulge more frequently in star borrowing has already taken hold. An Iowa blizzard and the resultant frostbitten nose gave to the motion picture industry a personage who was recently described by the highly conservative Bankers Monthly of America as the "New Napoleon in Motion Pictures"—none other than Mr. Trem Carr, production chief for Monogram Pictures.

Before entering production he worked for the U. S. Government as "cost expert" on the Pearl Harbor job, which cost $11,000,000.

A SYLPH RETURNS FROM THE ROAD

Even cold type turns romantic in these moonlight nights of warm breezes and 3.2, as witness the following bit of gripping tenderness which crept into the advertising columns of Elias Sugarman's show-sheet, Billboard:

> L. J. TREATED ME LIKE A DOG. House, savings, rings and mortgage on mother's house taken. I knew you would do same for me, dear. Paying way to New York. New company is awful. New Yorker (hotel), April 22-28. I ask for just one day. Past forgotten. If you can't, I'll meet you anywhere. I understand and love you. You won't know me; weight 110. Love. M.S.

Clarke Gable, Louis B. Mayer, Marion Davies, Harry Rapf, Joan Crawford, Dave Selznick and everyone else at Metro's Culver City studio must hereafter leave their dogs—if any—at home. Because Nils Asther's dog took himself a piece of a man's "pan," or vice versa, right on Mr. Schenck's movie-making property, Police Chief Hendry, of the studio police department, ordered all dogs off the lot, "to prevent a recurrence of this unfortunate accident." It's all very sad.

The Fox Film Corporation has sent to the press of the country the following important announcement:

> "The undress vogue having run its course, the gentle ladies of the screen are running to cover, which in this instance means more clothes.
> "A few years ago the policy was to exploit the figure divine, with only such slight adornment as a string of beads, or, when modesty intervened, a tissue-thin garment of silk which just barely hid the dimples of the lady's knees.

> "Today, all this is changed and the opposite is the case. . . ."

Fox Film started the other day on a new production, captioned, "Life in the Raw."

66 MORE STORIES PURCHASED FOR RELEASE TO EXHIBITORS IN 1933-34

Total Properties Bought for Production Since January 1 Now 216; May Purchases Set New Record for Single Month

Sixty-six plays, novels, published and original stories were purchased in May for feature release during 1933-34, bringing the total number of properties acquired since January 1 to 216, nearly all of which are on the new season's schedules. The current acquisitions established an all-time record for one month.

While sales executives in New York home offices were assiduously engaged in matters of policy for selling 1933-34 merchandise, and were outlining tentative drafts of policy revisions made necessary by changes in conditions and in the industry's exhibition structure, production staffs at the studios in Hollywood were making further advances in rounding out feature and short subject schedules for the new season. Deals for other important stories and plays were progressing, and during the week numerous contractual negotiations were completed, resulting in the engagement of new and promising talent and in the re-signing of old box office standbys.

Outstanding Works Acquired

The appearance in the group purchased in May of several successful stage and literary properties by well known authors should give to theatre owners the assurance that not a few of next season's releases should have the basic quality essential to successful performance at the box office. Outstanding in the May harvest are Charles G. Norris' "Zest," which Universal purchased; Owen Davis's mystery play, "Ninth Guest," a Columbia buy; Will James' popular story, "Smoky," acquired by Fox.

To Metro went the talker rights of, among others, Robert E. Sherwood's play, "Road to Rome"; Anthony Hope's popular "Prisoner of Zenda"; Vina Delmar's novel, "Portrait of Sadie McKee"; Somerset Maugham's wellknown "Painted Veil"; Arthur Somers Roche's Cosmopolitan serial, "Penthouse," and "Two Thieves," the latest work by Manuel Komroff, wellknown writer.

Paramount took an original by Rupert Hughes, and Jack Lait's "One Grand." John Monk Saunders' "Birds of Prey," and Floyd Gibbons' "Red Knights of Germany," are on the RKO list of current purchases. The Dumas classic, "Monte Cristo" and Zola's novel, "Nana," were bought by United Artists. In addition to "Zest," Universal acquired Vicki Baum's "I Loved a Man" and Ring Lardner's "I Can't Breathe." The best known in the Warner group is George Westley's play, "Rothschild."

MGM Most Active Story Purchaser

Metro purchased 14 stories and plays in May for production in 1933-34. RKO, with 13, was a close second. Paramount acquired eight, Columbia and Universal, each six; Fox, five; United Artists and Warner, four each; Monogram, three, and Chesterfield, Fineman and Freuler, one each. A recapitulation of story and play purchases since January 1, follows:

The backbone of 1933-34 features will be original stories written expressly for the screen by accomplished authors, also a substantial number of popular novels. Typical of the sources of material are the May acquisitions, of which five first appeared serially in magazines, eight were plays, 22 appeared as novels and 31 were original screen stories.

The scarcity of Broadway plays in the group appears to verify the opinions of New York and Hollywood executives that the motion picture should forget about Broadway as a source of material. Reasons given were the difficulty of adapting the majority of plays to the screen as mass material and, secondly, the excessive costs of talker rights to successful plays, prices of which are entirely out of proportion to negative costs and grosses at the present time.

Hollywood Herald reports that out of 360 qualified studio writers in Hollywood, 121, almost exactly one-third, have regular jobs—contracts for six months or longer. Another 100 work on 13-week assignments, on one-picture deals, or from week-to-week. The "steady" workers are allocated as follows:

Metro	36
Fox	23
Warner	20
Universal	15
Columbia	11
Radio	8
	121

Each studio has many more writers working, but there are no permanent posts other than those listed. Metro, for instance, has 70 at work, Paramount about 50.

"Closed Shop" for Writers

Inquiry among story agents revealed that there has been little, if any, change in the market for desirable story material since initiation of the script pool plan by members of the Hays organization about six weeks ago. However, Paramount recently has made the strongest efforts, successfully, to salvage some of its huge story investments which have been for years "on the shelf." At present, it is estimated that the company has 200 properties in its library, enough material for four years, at 50 releases annually. MGM has a similar number and Fox, too, is heavily stocked. Warner-First National is said to have fewer than any of the large studios.

One of the first problems to confront the Screen Writers' Guild, when adoption of the proposed new code of practice is adopted shortly, will be an equitable basis of writer employment. At present, it is said to be almost impossible for a writer to graduate from a small studio to a larger one, due to the fact that major companies almost invariably gauge a writer's ability by screen credits. The proposed codes of both the Screen Guild and the Academy cover working phases of writer effort, but neither has worked out a basis for gauging ability. The Academy set up a dual valuation plan, with screen credit and industry credit as the measure of writers' value. But it is not of record that any producer ever called upon the Academy to provide him with a list of writers whose ability is known but who have not been fortunate enough to attain major credits.

Original Stories in Majority, Few Broadway Plays Listed; Equitable Basis of Writer Employment Is Guild Problem

The writers' code seeks a modified closed shop for members of the Guild.

The Guild is unalterably opposed to any general pay cuts and to establishment of a central employment agency or bureau. Members would refuse to work with writers not members of the Guild ("closed shop" clause).

It would justify royalty payments, clarify deals on producer adoption of ideas from writers without paying for them, and provide penalties for "credit-grabbing." The code denounces unfair practices by executives, supervisors or directors, and takes from the existing writer-producer code the provision affecting free lance writers, which provides that writers on a week-to-week basis for ten consecutive weeks at $500 or less, shall have at least one week's notice before dismissal.

Also, it would take specified compensation clause from existing writer-producer code, and prohibit a member from signing a contract on a week-to-week basis, for one month or less.

Distributors and Booking Circuits

While Hollywood was concerned with the literary situation in its relation to motion picture production, the various large distributors were considering the advisability of refusing to sell 1933-34 product to booking circuits throughout the country. Through these booking units, the majority of which are located in the Midwest, independent exhibitors band together and bargain with distributors, both for rentals and play dates, using their combined strength. Distributors have been opposing booking combinations over a long period. The climax is expected during the summer.

Approximately $100,000 in fees is paid to the booking units by exhibitor members. Distributors feel this sum belongs either to the exhibitor or to the exchange, and they plan to see to it that it is no longer diverted to the booking systems. The fees range from $15 to $35 per week for each theatre. In addition, exchanges are said to feel that the booking plan robs them of valuable personal contact with their customers, and that the drain on prints created by booking circuits works a hardship in supplying non-members on preferred playing time days. In Chicago alone, approximately $400,000 in film rentals is handled annually through booking circuits.

Exhibitors, however, take the opposite view. They claim that booking circuits are their protection against circuit houses, which because of their large buying power, obtain a better deal than independents. Forced percentage deals on individuals also is a reason which exhibitors advance for membership in booking systems.

THE ENDLESS SEARCH FOR SCREEN MATERIAL

At least 50,000 stories and story ideas are investigated annually by the motion picture industry in its endless search for suitable material for the screens of the world. Typical of other companies is Paramount, which, since its inception, has read and analyzed a total of 150,000 writings, with a weekly average of 100 or more novels, short stories and original screen ideas scanned and synopsized.

In the earlier days the number was far smaller than now, when as many as 150 stories are read weekly in the New York offices alone. Sixty are scanned in Hollywood and additional stories and plays are studied in London, Paris, Berlin, Rome, Vienna and other foreign capitals.

The result of this is a flood of brief synopses of literary works flowing into Hollywood where the studio editorial board evaluates them for picture possibilities. When interest is shown by the board in some particular story, all members read the original work or a translation of it before a decision is made.

Every American novel and play is synopsized. Every short story in the "slick paper" and the adventure "pulp" magazines is read. Synopses are filed under "Type of story," "Author" and "Possibility for Maurice Chevalier" or another star, and are always available for reference. Complete magazine files covering fifteen years also are kept. Only occasional purchases are made of stories which never are synopsized.

Sidney Lanfield was engaged to direct four features for the new season, the first to star Francis Lederer. The studio staff of associate producers was augmented by William Sistrom, formerly production head of Pathe studios. Fred Guiol, ex-director, was signed to write. Garrett Fort was assigned to the "Death Watch" script. Ainsworth Morgan and Malcolm Stuart Boylan were signed to write.

In addition, there will be six Westerns starring Ken Maynard, including "King of the Arena," "Fiddlin' Buckaroo" and "Sling Shot Landon." There is a possibility that three others, "The Great Ziegfeld," "Woman Incorporated" and "SOS Iceberg" will be released as specials.

William Anthony McGuire was signed last week to write, direct and produce three for 1933-34. George Bancroft may star in the first, "When the Time Comes." The second, "Great Ziegfeld," he will write in collaboration with the late stage producer's widow, Billie Burke. The third will be a musical. Late last week, Dale Van Every, scenario editor at the studio, concluded conferences on 1933-34 product with home office executives in New York and returned to Universal City.

WARNER BROTHERS

Four story properties were purchased in May for 1933-34 release: "Bureau of Missing Persons," based on the detective bureau, to star either James Cagney or Spencer Tracy; "Easy to Love," an original, to star Bette Davis; "Kingfish," an original about Senator Huey Long. To star Edward Robinson; "Rothschild," play by George Westley, dealing with financier. George Arliss will probably star.

All Warner and First National players and workers were recalled to Hollywood this week for the reopening of the studio June 10, when work will start on the 1933-34 features.

The company is at least 15 pictures ahead of release dates. Fourteen writers are now preparing ten stories for immediate production, including: "The Kingfish," "Convention City," "Bureau of Missing Persons," "Red Meat," "America Kneels," "Wild Boys of the Road," "Finger Man," "Female," "Easy to Love," and a third musical, "Footlight Parade." Leslie Howard was signed this week to appear in three pictures yearly.

Restore Subtitles To Keep Patrons, Exhibitor, Urges

To the Editor of the Herald:

Mr. Editor, there is one question that has been discussed in the columns of your magazine, in every magazine connected with this industry, without arriving at any satisfactory conclusion so far as I'm concerned, and that is, what is the greatest contributing factor to this widespread falling off in interest, and, of course, decreased attendance to what motion pictures have to offer.

The causes are manifold, of course. The first might well be charged to natural reaction of the public on anything after the novelty has worn off somewhat. This one fact alone could easily account for a 10 per cent decrease. Lack of funds, from which every section of this country—in fact, all countries—has suffered for the past three years, and many other contributing causes might be cited. But there is one cause that to my knowledge has never been mentioned yet. To me it looms up as one of the greatest if not really the greatest of all. And it is this: The discontinuance of the subtitles, any pictured story where one has to rely entirely on dialogue. I have had patrons tell me, "In the days of silents, I could just relax, read the subtitles and know exactly what was going on." But now they have to be on the alert all the time for fear of missing some important part of the story. Why couldn't each reel, like the chapter in some novel, have a line or two telling the patron what to look for in said reel? You know, Mr. Editor, with all these flash-backs, imperfect recording, etc., if the patron could be told in advance what to look for, where each scene of the action was laid, it would help a lot. And a line or two in the middle of the reel would not be amiss.

I have been managing this theatre 12 years and have seen nearly every show, yet I have to see some of them twice before I get the real drift of the story. Also, when giving the cast, why not give the part they portray as well? Some do this, but others do not.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La.

SCHAEFER AND LYNCH NAMED BY PARAMOUNT

Sales Executive Made General Manager; Lynch Heads Committee To Advise Trustees on Reorganizing of Theatres

Two important steps were taken last week by the management at Paramount Publix in furthering the process of reorganization. George J. Schaefer, general sales manager, was appointed to the general managership of Paramount Publix and all its subsidiaries, and S. A. Lynch was made chairman of a committee to advise trustees on all matters pertaining to theatre reorganization.

Behind the promotion of Mr. Schaefer is the inference, crystallized by the new post, that operation of the various Paramount organizations is to undergo no major changes.

Renew Circuit Efforts

Despite widespread decentralization of home office theatre management, Paramount Publix does not intend to abandon its policy of exhibition control on a national scale. The appointment last week of Mr. Lynch, who was formerly president of Southern Enterprises, Inc., to chairman of the trustee advisory committee was the cue for renewed effort on the company's part to retain its leading position as a major circuit. However, the old policy of operating directly from the home office all theatres throughout the country which was abandoned last year, the first step toward decentralization, will not be restored. The company's theatre divisions in various territories will continue to be operated individually in the field.

At its peak, 18 months ago, the entire Publix chain comprised approximately 1,100 houses. As a result of the decentralization, brought about principally by receiverships, several hundreds of houses have been turned over to former operators, usually on a partnership basis with management vested in the hands of those who re-acquired the properties. The parent circuit corporation, Publix Enterprises, has dropped 60 of 247 houses which it operated directly, according to Dan Michalove, special assistant to Irving Trust Company, the receivers.

Lynch's Committee Named

Mr. Michalove said Monday that while Paramount Publix is planning to continue in control of a major circuit, it would be impossible at present to forecast how many theatres would be retained for the reorganized circuit. He would not comment on the final disposition of houses which have been decentralized and a part ownership retained. He did, however, intimate that unless drastic reorganization of some form took place, outright ownership of many might be relinquished.

The new appointment was made at the suggestion of Adolph Zukor and Mr. Schaefer and has met with complete approval of the trustees. Mr. Lynch's committee is composed of Frank Freeman, head of the Paramount Publix real estate department; Austin Keough, general counsel of the company; Fred Mohrhardt, auditor; Rumsey Scott, former president of American Cable Company, and Ethan D. Alyea, of the firm of Root, Clark and Buckner, counsel for the trustees.

The plan to continue as a major circuit is said to call for partnerships throughout the country, complete decentralization with operation vested in the partners or through local representatives.

Paramount Publix trustees and 12 creditor banks have in progress negotiations to effect the surrender of the banks' preference growing out of the $13,200,000 Film Productions Corporation financing, without instituting court proceedings. An action was ready for filing a week ago when negotiations were opened. New Paramount financing is understood to be involved.

Final examination of the contested transaction was made Wednesday at the creditors' hearing, when Mr. Kohn, Paramount treasurer, identified notes turned over to Paramount by Film Productions Corporation subsequent to the bank transaction.

During 1929 and 1930, Paramount Publix acquired 176 theatres by issuing stock with repurchase guarantees, according to the testimony of Ralph A. Kohn, Paramount treasurer, at a creditors' meeting Wednesday before Referee Henry K. Davis. Mr. Kohn's testimony revealed that the acquisition of the Kunsky-Trenble, Great States, Dent, Rickard, Nace and Hostadtler circuits on this basis cost the company $10,766,360 for repurchase of the stock issues while the market value of the stock at the time of the reductions aggregated $3,409,892.

Included in all such deals were options which provided that in the event Paramount called the stock for redemption at the guaranteed price and the stock owner refused to sell, the company would be relieved of its guarantee to repurchase thereafter. William Morris Agency, in which Paramount acquired a 50 per cent interest in this manner in August, 1929, was the only company which refused the redemption offer. A total of 736,087 shares of its common stock was issued by Paramount for these properties, Mr. Kohn testified, and most of the deals were authorized by Sam Katz, then head of Publix Theatres, and Sidney R. Kent, at that time Paramount general sales manager.

The situation in the field has taken on a new light during the past week. Theatres which have been dark, bankrupt, or in receivership, are being turned over to new interests. In Salt Lake City two offers for a 50 per cent interest in Publix Salt Lake, wholly owned by Publix Enterprises, were made last week by Oscar Oldknow, former Fox Theatre executive, and Louis Marcus, formerly of the houses now comprising the Publix-Salt Lake circuit. Offers of $50,000 are said to have been filed by each, a price which would permit either one to take over seven of the theatres. The offers were disclosed last week at a creditors' meeting in the offices of Referee Davis. Decision on the offers is still pending.

The formation of a bondholders protective committee for the owners of Granada Realty Company 6 per cent first mortgage bonds was announced last week in San Francisco. The realty company is owned by Paramount Publix and the property involved is that occupied by the Paramount theatre. In Phoenix, Arizona, Harry Nace is reported to be winding up a deal to take over the Publix circuit of 11 theatres in Arizona from the receivers. Nace and Rickard formerly operated many of the houses.

The Big Brain

(Radio)

Drama

Novelly interpreting a familiar, yet interesting, theme, "The Big Brain," has those entertainment elements which set it in the better-than-ordinary program picture classification. Basically a character drama with every development centering about the career of one man, it affords comedy, topical timliness, romance appeal and a lot of excitement.

The way the story has been constructed, building a barber to a combination Kruger-Insull-Ponzi big business-promoting character, tuned to a modern key, continually maintaining a vein of suspense and ringing in the associated development at the most opportune times, gives it a novel interest, one that should hold the interest of patrons who are looking for something new in screen entertainment.

Bootblack in a barber shop, Werner, spurred by Margy's laughter at his dreams, becomes ambitious to boost his position in life. Attending a barber college, there is much comedy. Then, in his own shop, he becomes associated with Slick Ryan in a high pressure stock selling enterprise. When Slick starts two-timing him with Margy and the D. A. starts sticking his nose into the bucket shop business, Max leaves for England and safety. Meanwhile, he gets a yen for Cynthia, but it's no sale. On the boat, invited by Darlington, he is taken in a poker game. Not being a welcher, he ties up with Darlington in introducing modern American promotion ideas to the British. Short-lived success, then a collapse of an oil scheme, and he runs out, leaving some one else holding the bag. Safely tucked away beyond extradition in a New York county, he is visited by Cynthia, who persuades him to visit her house. Over the county line, he is arrested.

To get over the idea of the film, it probably will be necessary to use advertising lines that will explain the title, since it suggests something mechanical. Get over the idea that "The Big Brain" could concoct all sorts of ideas for fleecing suckers, but that it was a chump for a girl. Use the theme of the story—the bootblack, barber-college pupil, high pressure stock salesman, billion dollar promoter, to make the idea more understandable. Unusual ballyhoo should certainly be used. The story probably will be more effective than the cast in drawing interest. Sell fun, excitement and novelty. It would not be out of place to develop the barber college angle in all sorts of ways. A stock promotion herald that guarantees 100 per cent dividends in entertainment certainly has a place in any campaign.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Sunset Pass

(Paramount)

Western Romance

This is a straight western dramatic romance that, with few exceptions, follows the familiar formula. The Zane Grey story, given unusual production values, beautiful scenic backgrounds, a competent cast and thoughtful direction, constitutes entertainment not only for the "western fans" and the youngsters, but also for those patrons who are looking for a little exciting diversity. Drama, excitement, action, romance and comedy are there aplenty.

The plot has Jack, in the guise of a train robber, going to jail with the bad man, Clink, in order to ferret out the secret of who is responsible for all the cattle rustling. Escaping, he proceeds to the Preston Ranch, first meeting Jane and then Ash, who is the weakling front for Hesbitt.

Minor rustlings continue as Hesbitt makes his plans for one grand clean-up. Busting into the Hesbitt camp and introducing himself as the notorious train robber, it develops that Hesbitt is actually the man whom Jack is posing as. The big drive is underway. Our hero gets the news to the owners and sheriffs, and the cattle are stampeded down Sunset Pass onto the would-be rustlers. Of course, there's the man-to-man fight between Ash and Jack and the apparent breakup between him and Jane, but all is straightened out.

There is more than enough in "Sunset Pass" in the elements mentioned to interest the everyday man and woman theatregoers. Naturally, it's the kind of show that will win the youngsters.

Supplementing the exciting, hard-riding adventure atmosphere of advertising that should be given the picture, there is opportunity for much exploitation. Tieups with book stores and libraries on the Zane Grey stories should not be overlooked, nor opportunities to arrange for window displays of guns, early western pictures, old newspapers that feature stories of cattle wars. Including stills from the picture and other ballyhoo material—particularly if you have slackened off in this kind of showmanship during the past months—should whip up more than ordinary interest. Use advertising lines based on the idea that "Sunset Pass" is a rousing, romantic drama of life in the old west—of a man who dared death to establish law and order, to win the love of a woman.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Story by Zane Grey. Directed by Henry Hathaway. Screen play by Jack Cunningham and Gerald Geraghty. Photographed by Archie Stout. Running time, 63 minutes. Release date, May 26, 1933.

The Sphinx

(Monogram)

Murder Mystery

A murder mystery theme provides the dramatic punch. A neat romance involving a hustling, ingenious police reporter and a sob-sister writer, supplemented by a clever line of comedy revolving around a typically dumb-smart detective, sustains it. As the show develops, suspense adds a melodramatic wallop.

The odd feature of the film is that the detectives, Hogan and Riley, together with Burton, the reporter, have a strong suspicion that Breen is a murderer. The audience is almost certain of it. Yet even though Breen is positively identified and brought to trial, he is not convicted. The gag that provides his alibi is that the murderer conversed with the people who identified him. The man who was tried and freed was scientifically proved deaf and dumb.

With three killings unsolved, the story reaches the point where Jerry's infatuation for the mute brings her in close association with him. To stifle this growing romance her reporter-lover is more than ever determined to get the goods on Breen. Here is generated the tense suspense that carries the last two reels. Jerry, disappearing in the Breen mansion, Hogan, Burton and their associates set out to sweat a confession out of Breen. Hogan strums a piano, the idea injecting much comedy. With everybody on pins and needles, he strikes the last note on the keyboard. Asliding door opens and Breen's counterpart steps forward. He is killed and the mute commits suicide as Jerry is found. Then the twin-brother identity is divulged, the motives are established, romance culminates and Hogan proves that he is a swell detective.

Although interest is centered on the principals, the entire cast carries the story. Everything is played up as an illusionary, yet logical, series of events. While not a big production, it is interesting entertainment.

There is a broad field for diversified patron appeal. Publicity that effectively combines the murder mystery premise, the romantic angle and the comedy contrast should intrigue curiosity of men and women. Exploitation that capitalizes on the familiar detective-newspaper reporter feuds, developing into some sort of contest that asks how this man whom everybody knows to be a murderer could be proved innocent, will help. As the deaf and dumb sign language plays a prominent part, trick gags using those signs in advertising should prove effective in stimulating interest. With the title as a basis, there is an unusual opportunity to develop ingenious campaigns. — McCarthy, Hollywood.

Over the Seven Seas

(Vanderbilt)

Travel Film

The seafaring William K. Vanderbilt, who spends much time aboard his beautiful white yacht, Alva, made a trip last year which literally carried him into all of the seven seas. With cameras and the occasional use of sound recording apparatus, Mr. Vanderbilt has contrived to produce a motion picture travel feature of undeniable interest, some unusual scenic effects, and several sequences of really remarkable quality done in Multicolor.

There is comparatively little undersea photography included in the compilation, yet there obviously was little opportunity to insert such material when so much ground was to be covered for the film to conform to the title. The result is naturally rather spotty, since only a flash is given of each of the many shores upon which the Alva touched during the round-the-world trip of Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt and their crew of 51.

In the cutting and editing, as well as in the writing of the subtitle continuity, Mr. Vanderbilt was aided commendably by an editorial staff headed by Truman Tally and Louis de Rochemont of the Fox Movietone organization. In addition to the subtitles, there is a certain amount of natural sound and considerable accompanying explanatory dialogue by Mr. Vanderbilt, smoothly rendered.

In the same manner that there is a deal of generally wide appeal and interest in travel subjects, there is much in this feature. Whether the picture can stand on its own feet as the feature attraction on a regular run theatre program is for the exhibitor to determine for himself, basing his decision, probably, on the type of patronage upon which he can draw, as well as on the previously demonstrated drawing power of such material for his patronage.

The use of color is a strong selling point in any campaign on this picture, and a very liberal lobby use of stills from the film should bring wide pedestrian attention. Every effort should be made by the exhibitor to engage the attention and support of schools and various women's organizations in the community, since it is the type of material which very definitely appeals to them. Offer this film as something in the nature of a special attraction, shown at a special time, if the ordinary methods seem inadvisable for best results.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced and directed by William K. Vanderbilt. Distributor and general release date not determined. Editorial staff: Truman Talley, Louis deRochemont, Sydney MacKean, Russell Shields, J. H. Bursch. Cameramen and sound engineers: A. L. Gilks, Robert Bronner, Bonney Powell, Walter Hicks. Running time, 70 minutes.

Melody Cruise

(Radio)

Musical Comedy

As summertime entertainment this light musical comedy romance is decidedly appropriate. Novelty in idea, construction and presentation is the outstanding characteristic. The show is colorfully glamorous, music catchy, settings modernistic and generally lavish. Bevies of charming girls accentuate the color. Unusual camera work strengthens production values and the unusual idea of shifting successive lines in the dialogue, lyrics and music to various groups, individuals and even the machinery of the ship in perfect rhythm, is almost sure to prove an audience-interesting feature.

Most of the action takes place on a mid-winter cruise from New York to California with stops at Havana and Panama and the finale in Los Angeles, Santa Barbara, Yosemite and Palm Springs. Ruggles, naturally, is the chief mirth-provoker, but he is only a short step ahead of Chick Chandler. Between the carryings-on of this pair and the antics of the two shanghaied show girls, preview audience found plenty of laugh opportunity.

Typical of musicals, the basic story is broken up by numerous asides and interludes in the specialty features that aid greatly in maintaining interest in the romantic and pseudo-dramatic elements. The ice-ballet, coming near the close, is a tingling picturization of modernistic geometric design skate waltzing. This episode, in conjunction with the wintry atmosphere of the prelude, is a decided asset for exploiting the show as "hot weather" amusement.

Appeal should be general. The picture is clean and clever, smart and colorful, so should be appreciated by all classes of trade from family audiences to sophisticates.

The plot places the pals, Pete and Alan, aboard the ship, where Alan meets Ann, a European siren. A gay pre-sailing party precedes the casting off, during which Alan writes a letter to Pete's wife detailing several of the scarlet chapters of that man's life, and Pete unwittingly signs it. The letter is mailed to Pete's wife with instructions that it be not opened until Alan is married, all of which is Alan's idea of insurance against his marrying.

The situation is complicated by the discovery of two empty-domed show girls, Zoe and Vera, in Pete's stateroom next morning, and by Alan falling in love with Laurie. Hickey now shares the comedy with Ruggles, with the two girls making it exciting for all concerned.

Eventually landing in California, Alan gets in wrong with Laurie, who has learned to love him, when she sees him kissing Ann. The unexpected appearance of Pete's wife doesn't make for serenity. But while he's wondering how he's going to keep her from opening that letter, Alan chases Laurie through Santa Barbara, Yosemite and Palm Springs. Finally they marry and though Pete thinks he has destroyed the incriminating letter, Mrs. Wells flashes it on him and he sinks into wee proportions for the fadout.

Stressing the novelty, charm and comedy-romance color, in addition to the musical atmosphere, should create better than usual audience interest. The title is intriguing and suggests a host of ingenious exploitation ideas from travel tie-ups to music-radio contacts. Capitalize on the pulling power of Ruggles' name and don't overlook the popularity of Harris with radio fans. Tuneful advertising and colorful decorated lobbies built around a "nautical, but nice" idea should be effective.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

When Ladies Meet

(MGM)

Comedy Drama

Smart, but not too sophisticated, "When Ladies Meet" has all the earmarks of class entertainment with mass appeal. Finely acted and mounted, moving along with a pace that always maintains interest, it balances drama with timely comedy; continuously keeps its romance prominent, giving novelty, color and glamour to its basic plot of the old eternal triangle.

Everything is logically and sensibly developed. Sympathies are directed into the proper channels, yet the buildup is consistently tense, but the suspense is not too dramatic, comedy letdowns taking care of that. While there are moments when it tugs at the heartstrings, it nevertheless is amusing entertainment.

The story is simple but appealing. Mary, an ambitious authoress, is the apple of Jimmy's eye, yet she cannot help but fall in love with Roger, a philandering publisher. Jimmy's efforts to break up the liaison only add to Mary's determination. Roger's many affairs being known to his wife, Clare, she is content to let them run their course, knowing that her mate always returns to her. With Bridget aiding and abetting Roger and Mary, the film approaches the point where Jimmy realizes he must do something desperate.

He brings Clare in on the two lovers and when she fully understands what her husband's ardor has done for many other girls, the story reaches the breaking point. The finale has Roger appreciating that he has stepped off the straight and narrow once too often, determining to win back his wife's respect and love, and Mary convinced that Jimmy is the only man for her.

Sold to your patrons with a dignity commensurate with its smartness, combining art with copy that stresses its sparkling wit, intriguing drama, appealing love interest, glamour and humanness, it should be a standout. Convince your patrons that you are certain of the entertainment value of the picture even to the point of guaranteeing it with a personal endorsement. Don't worry that it is essentially a woman's show. There is more than enough to hold the attention of the men. Sell the cast. Sell the show and box office will be limited only by the effort and ingenuity you put into your introductory campaign.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by M-G-M. Directed by Harry Beaumont. From the play by Rachel Crothers. Screen play by John Meehan and Leon Gordon. Photographed by Ray June. Running time, 85 minutes. Release date, June 23, 1933.

When Strangers Marry

(Columbia)

Drama

Moving at a rapid pace, this has its fair share of action, but the picture falls rather short of what might have been expected. The conclusion was too much in routine to measure up to the standard set earlier in the picture. "When Strangers Marry" falls into the program classification, is mildly entertaining for the regular run smaller theatre.

Coming close to being the only really salable name in the cast, but that a good one for the lesser theatre especially, is that of Jack Holt, two-fisted, pugnacious and a steady, consistent performer. Lilian Bond, playing opposite, is attractive and turns in a reasonably good performance, while the others of the cast work satisfactorily.

The title is in a measure an unfortunate choice. It is rather a lifeless phrase, and as far as the picture is concerned it conveys little, applying only in the slightest degree to the story.

Holt, a railroad engineer, and Ward Bond, his assistant, stop in Paris on the way to a construction job in the fever-infested jungles of the East. An accidental meeting of Holt and Miss Bond results in a sudden and quite unexpected (for Holt) marriage. The girl insists on accompanying them into the jungle, but Holt leaves her in the nearest town. On the job Holt encounters numerous unforeseen obstacles in the form of destroyed supply trains, stolen quinine, raided food stores, all of which he traces back to a rival syndicate, anxious that his railroad building fail, and to Arthur Vinton, posing in the town as a salesman, who is the agent of the syndicate.

Vinton, incidentally, pays altogether too much attention to Miss Bond, a fact resented not only by Holt but also by Barbara Barondess, an accomplice. When Holt comes to town and leaves with the necessary pack train after refusing to take Miss Bond, she almost succumbs to Vinton's invitation to accompany him to Europe. When she learns, however, that Vinton has sent a squad of men after Holt, planning to kill him, she shoots Vinton, reaches Holt with a few friends, and they defend their railroad from the attack in a lively closing sequence which is more noisy than effective.

Sell this as a lively action picture of railroad building in the jungles, stressing the popular name of Jack Holt for all it is worth. Bring in the secondary angle of the sudden marriage and the girl who learns loyalty all at once, and in a hard school. Therein should be a possible appeal to both men and women. It would perhaps be well if the exhibitor did not promise too much. The youngsters may see it without particular objection.—AARONSON, New York.

Professional Sweetheart

(RKO Radio)

Comedy

A glance at the cast should be sufficient indication that "Professional Sweethearts" is a comedy; yet, until it is clarified, the title is hardly relevant to the theme. Actually it's a semi-satirical, almost burlesque, picturization of behind-the-microphone radio life. At times it is gayly tuneful with catchy musical numbers; then it is roaringly funny; it becomes romantic and psuedo-dramatic and winds up in a farcical business merger. These factors, plus a definite novelty that features what high-powered publicity can do, endow the picture with an appeal that should be pleasantly received by the run-o'-the-mill picture-goers. Hokum predominates.

The yarn presents Glory as the publicity-created, innocent, demure ace performer on the Ipsy-Wipsy Wash Cloth radio program. Really, she's a hard-boiled spit-fire with a yen for night clubs, hot romance, bright lights and everything else that her sponsor, Ipswich, and his press agent, Speed, deny her.

When Glory threatens to kick over the traces in an interview with Elmerada, Speed digs up one of her fan-mail admirers, Jim, a Kentucky mountaineer. Any man is good enough for Glory, so the romance is on and following a lot of high pressure air-wave, newspaper publicity, a radio wedding is set.

But Glory's contract is about to expire and the Kelsey Dish Rag Company is hot to sign her up. O'Connor convinces the hill-billy, Jim, that his romance was just a big publicity stunt and assures him that his wife's future is better in Kelsey's hands than in Ipswich's. O'Connor arranges a secret honeymoon trip to Atlantic City; Speed fixes one up for Niagara Falls; but Jim crosses 'em both by taking Glory back to his mountain cabin. Turning cave-man, he finds that Glory revels in it, while Speed and O'Connor, bedeviled by their bosses, race to find the missing song-bird. Glory's maid meanwhile has substituted on the Ipsy-Wipsy program and Jim gets all excited about her. He doesn't know she's a colored girl.

The pair, escorted by the two high-pressure boys, come back to New York; the business rivals merge as the Ipsy-Kelsey Clothiers, with Jim and the Purity Girl Glory the biggest radio stars ever.

There's plenty of fun, color and life to sell in "Professional Sweethearts." Much thought should be given to creating ad lines that will elucidate the title. Showmanship exploitation should prove more of an asset in this connection than straight description. Wherever possible, tieups with radio stations should be made to spread the "inside stuff" hurly-burly. Any number of trick gags can be built around the Ipsy Wipsy Wash Cloths and the Kelsey Dish Rags, through tieups with merchants. The musical background should not be overlooked, nor should the publicity buildup given the Purity Girl be ignored. This angle makes it possible to concoct a local talent "Purity Girl" contest. —MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by RKO Radio. Executive producer, Merian C. Cooper. Associate producer, H. N. Swanson. Directed by William Seiter. Original story and screen play by Maurine Watkins. Art directors, Van Nest Polglase, Carroll Clark. Music director, Roy Webb. Music and lyrics by Harry Akst, Edward Eliscu. Photographer, Edward Cronjager. Sound recorder, Clem Portman. Laughing at Life

Drama with Comedy

Detailing the colorful career of a daring soldier-of-fortune, "Laughing at Life," Nat Levine production, is an exciting, attention-arresting yarn that should find a ready reception from all types of patrons. Rough, tough and he-man, it departs radically from the rowdy sexy character of previoues McLaglen films. Including drama, romance, comedy, intrique, the major part of the story deals with the exciting life of the gun-running gringo military leader of the liberal faction planning an O. Henry South American revolution.

At first glance, the show might appear as essentially a man's picture, but due to the human interest that surrounds Captain Easter's early family life, the romance between Pat and Ruth and the influence of Panchita, there is plenty of entertainment that can be made to appeal strongly to feminine patrons.

The cast, numbering a host of familiar names, with noted players occupying bit roles, should in itself be a healthful influence in any campaign.

Beginning with the construction of the Panama Canal, McHale is revealed as an adventurous character whom the law always is looking for. Effecting a thrilling escape from his nemesis, Mason, the story takes McHale soldier-of-fortuning around the world for a generation. In 1917 he gets word that his wife has died and his son is lost. A bit of the World War comes when the now Captain Burke meets up with Mason and again disobeys orders, for which he is court martialed and imprisoned. He escapes as he is about to be medaled for heroism, then the yarn settles down to its South American revolution atmosphere. Here enters Panchita, who has a strong yen for Captain Easter, but business is the only thing on his mind and the gal becomes an untrustworthy associate in the movement. Also appear the sweethearts, Pat and Alice. With Mason again showing up, President Valenzuela's forces, Don Flavio (the rebel leader) and his old foe are trying to knock off Easter. When Pat decides to cast his lot with Easter everything is jake, but just on the eve of the revolt Pat, fearing for her lover's life, reveals that the boy is really his son. Easter sets out to get the boy out of the country. But the jealous Pancheta has started the revolution. Pat is caught by the federals. Easter makes a deal with the president to round up Don Flavio's cohorts. This done in the nick-of-time fashion saves Pat's life, Mason is arrested as "Captain Easter" and Pat and Alice flee in her high-powered car, while McLaglen and Frankie Darro make their getaway on horses.

Packing a punch in almost every sequence, with color and novel twists, the show finely possesses the elements of fictionized and illusionary entertainment. Selling McLaglen, who dominates the portentious cast, as a glamorous soldier of fortune, should lay the foundation for audience interest. Promise a decided revelation in the McLaglen character, providing entertainment for youngsters as well as grownups and creating the impression (which will be borne out) that "Laughing at Life" is a much better than ordinary show, and the box office should show some pleasing returns.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

The Fighting Parson

(Allied)

Comedy Western

Comedy providing the motivating force, this newest Hoot Gibson western combines the old thrill-adventure formula with much that is different. Preview audience reactions indicated it would just about fill the bill in theatres using this type of entertainment. Story and action constitute the type of amusement that seldom fails with the youngsters. At the same time there is more than enough romance, drama, excitement and thrill supplementing the comedy.

Arizona loses most of his and Steve's outer garments in a crap game. Riding along, they come across some ministerial raiment which Mike forced the Rev. Mr. Doolittle to shed before he chased him out into the desert. Steve puts on the clothes and rides into town, where he is mistaken by Mrs. Larkin for the evangelist who is going to hold a revival and by Bart, the bad man, as a no-account cowboy. As the price of keeping his identity secret, Hoot agrees to intercede for Bart, who is only a couple of steps from the noose.

Besides the comedy, provided chiefly by Bill Robbins and Ethel Wales, many laughs are engendered by Gibson, Marceline Day and even the bad man, Stanley Blystone. Spotting it as a western that is as amusing as it is exciting should lure many in addition to the regular western fans.

Several incidents should inspire unusual showmanship. Six or seven infants are gathered for the christening, which suggests an old-fashioned baby-show. The almost-wedding sequence points to a stage wedding. June being the month of brides, such an effort should be the means of pepping up unusual interest. The baby show for a matinee and the stage wedding for evening should be one means of getting around the hot weather problem.

Go after the youngsters strong and devote a little more attention to stimulating adult attention.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Detroit Lakes, Minn.

DEAR HERALD:

Last Sunday was "Mother's Day" and we were in Minneapolis and spent the afternoon with some relatives out at "Minne-Ha-Ha Falls." The falls were there, but we didn't see Minnie. In fact, there wasn't any water running over the falls. The falls were as dry as a Nebraska politician. But speaking of "Mother's Day," why is it we can't have a "Dad's Day"? If it weren't for Dad there wouldn't be any mothers. Jevver think of that? Congress ought to do something about this. This thing is getting to be too one-sided.

If we ever go to Minnesota again and fail to find H. J. Ludcke operating the Ludcke theatre at St. Peter we are going to make a fuss about it. There's an operator who knows what it's all about. You can spend a couple of hours with H. J. and never miss the time. The business ought to have more like him.

H. H. Sandon of the Sandon theatre at Blue Earth agrees with every other theatreman we have called on that dirty, salacious pictures are the bane of this business. But what he and other theatremen think about it doesn't seem to cut any figure with the production heads. You know what the old lady said about her son, "The whole army was out of step except Jim." That's the Hollywood theory.

H. A. Nelson of the Princess theatre at St. James was playing "Be Mine Tonight" when we called. Universal advertises this picture as a musical comedy, but it isn't. It's a comedy-drama with music, and that's the way you should advertise it, but put a footnote to it that it's the cleanest picture ever made. H. A. had us up to his house for breakfast the next morning, and the Mrs. sure had a feed for us. Now wasn't that sumpin'?

King Vidor is going to make a rural farm picture. Hip, Hip, Hurrah! He's going to shoot the scenes in California instead of Nebraska or Iowa and there's no darn sense in that. All California knows about farming is to farm the farmer. When the directors want an Alaskan scene they shoot it down in Paragua, where they can show some Hula Hula girls with gowns made out of a couple of bullrushes. If they want an Egyptian desert scene they shoot it down at Yuma, Arizona. King Vidor is a swell director and his pictures are generally A1, but we've seen some pictures by other directors where we thought they should have shot the director instead of the scene and dismissed the cast and called it a half a day.

When we called on R. A. Palmer of the Princess theatre at Sleepy Eye he said he always left his gun at home when he should have carried it. We told him that we never carried ours any more because we seldom found a theatreman who was worth shooting. Then he said, "Come on; we're going to add a little to Minnesota's 'Prosperity.'" And just a little way from Sleepy Eye was a lake full of bass and the season wasn't open.

Redding and Stroud still operate the Wonderland at Windom. The Wonderland is like Schlitz beer: it is what made Windom famous. The public has come to know that if it's on the screen of the Wonderland it's the best show in the state. That's why all roads lead to Windom, and that's why Redding and Stroud try to pick clean pictures, and that's why they are getting ringbones and spavins on both feet trying to do it.

One might suppose from his name that Jack O'Brien of the Colonial theatre at Tracy is a Swede. When he gave us a renewal for his subscription to the HERALD he said: "A yust tank A take dos HERALD some more times." But folks, you can't make an Irishman out of a Swede. And you can't make the people around Tracy think that Jack isn't 100 per cent plus any way you are a mind to take him. He's Johnnie-at-the-rat-hole when it comes to putting on entertainment for the Tracy folks.

Granite Falls is located right down in a hole in the ground. There are hills all around the place, but Joe Schindele found a spot level enough to build the Avelon on, and the Avelon is a swell theatre. It couldn't be anything else when Joe built it, and Mrs. Schindele wouldn't have been satisfied with anything short of the best theatre in the neighborhood.

Willmar is where they had the big rain the night we stayed there, and Abner, what a rain it was. April Shower stood in water clear up to her—knees, and that rain was the reason why M. H. Carey didn't have a corporal's guard to his show. We were treated so swell by Mr. and Mrs. Carey that we have forgotten what the show was.

We are going to take our hat off to A. F. McKellar, who operates the Hancock theatre at Hancock. There's a town that isn't bigger than your thumb nail, but A. F. has his house open for business and he goes after business like a pup for warm milk. Mrs. McKellar said she was much pleased that we called on 'em, and we told her it was unanimous. We hope the McKellars make it go, and they probably will, for they are both HERALD fans.

W. J. Benfield operates the Grand at Graceville. W. J. is single and he won't let a girl get within 40 feet of him, although they try to gang up on him occasionally, but he's pretty foxy and has succeeded in dodging 'em to date, but some day he will meet his Waterloo. Right now he says he's too poor to buy fig leaves.

Bonnie Benfield of the Strand at Morris has bought himself a new car and a new set of golf clubs. He drives his new car around of days and Mrs. Benfield says he sleeps with his clubs under his pillow every night.

Bonnie is going to Minneapolis and clean up on the boys when they have their tournament in a few days. Besides his Morris house he has a theatre at Elbow Lake, Minn., and one at Milbank, S. D. He drove us around to all his houses and his car ran just like April Shower, only a little different. It's a half sister to April Shower.

H. J. Longaker still has the Glenwood theatre at Glenwood. Glenwood is located right on the banks of a big lake. H. J. says he has a trained northern pike that does all the billing for him around the lake. He says he goes down to the lake each morning with a roll of bills and blows a horn and the pike comes up and takes the bills in his mouth and goes and distributes a bill to each cottage around the lake and when he comes back he gives him a bottle of "prosperity" and a huckleberry pie. H. J. has been listening to Baron Munchausen. We want to match him against Elmer Gaily of Wayne, Neb. We'll bet on Gaily.

The State theatre at Alexandria is owned and managed by the Midwest Theatre Corp. It is one of the finest houses we have found in the state in a town of that size except the Redwood at Redwood Falls, which is operated by Mr. Gagley.

Andy and Herb Anderson are still at the helm of the State theatre here in Detroit Lakes. This afternoon they are starting "King Kong" and we'll betcha they do business. These boys are the top-notch golfers of northern Minnesota, and out of consideration for their feelings, we wouldn't go out and play with them. Andy and Mrs. Anderson took us out to the club house to dinner today, which was mighty nice of 'em.

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Allied

LOCAL BAD MAN: Hoot Gibson—Only a fair program picture that meant nothing at the box office. Running time, 62 minutes. Played April 28-29.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

AIR HOSTESS: James Murray, Evalyn Knapp—Very good. Running time, 67 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

BELOW THE SEA: Ralph Bellamy, Fay Wray—A very good melodrama of this kind. Picture appeals more to men than to women. Undersea shots thrilling and very interesting. Where the octopus surrounds the diving bell and cuts off the oxygen, almost suffocating the occupants, and the fight with the octopus and the deep sea diver with an undersea torch is the most thrilling part of the picture. Running time, 79 minutes. Played May 20-21.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Rural patronage.

CHILD OF MANHATTAN: Nancy Carroll, John Boles—A very entertaining picture. Should please most every one. Work of Nancy Carroll and John Boles excellent. Columbia is releasing some good pictures this season. Played May 13-14.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Rural patronage.

FORBIDDEN TRAIL: Buck Jones—Very good western. Not one of these cheap westerns. Running time, 62 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

HELLO, TROUBLE: Buck Jones—Very good western picture. Pleased all. Running time, 60 minutes. Played May 20.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

OBEY THE LAW: Leo Carrillo, Lois Wilson—A very interesting program picture. Good story and well acted. Gave satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SO THIS IS AFRICA: Wheeler & Woolsey—This has made more money for us than any other picture has for the past 10 months. I didn't think it was possible to get a full house in this depression, but "So This Is Africa" did the trick. As far as the picture was concerned, it had plenty talking in it that was just plain vulgar. It seems as if about 75 per cent of the picture patrons like this kind of entertainment. Not a walkout or any direct compliment, so I guess we should be satisfied. My advice to exhibitors is if you can get away with this type of pictures be sure and hook it. Columbia will treat you right and no doubt the picture will make money. Running time, 72 minutes. Played May 7-8.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

STATE TROOPER: Regis Toomey, Evelyn Knapp—Very good family picture. Fine for Friday-Saturday. Running time, 68 minutes. Played May 5-6.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

WHITE EAGLE: Buck Jones—A mighty good western. In fact very entertaining and instructive as to Indian lore and pony express days. Good business three days.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

First National

CENTRAL AIRPORT: Richard Barthelmess—Very good picture. Full of thrills and excitement. Everybody well pleased and business good. Running time, 70 minutes. Played May 15-16.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

ELMER THE GREAT: Joe E. Brown—Another good one from First National. Brown is quite a favorite here, and this picture pleased my patrons very much. Played May 5-6.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Small city and rural patronage.

EMPLOYEES' ENTRANCE: Warren William, Loetta Young—Good program picture.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

LILLY TURNER: Ruth Chatterton—This is as poor a show as we've had on a Sunday for a long time. Play it on an off night. Pleased about 15%. This is really the first poor picture we've played from this company this year. Right straight through Warner-First National have been giving us real good shows. Runing time, 65 minutes. Played May 14-15.—R. L. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandreau, S. D. General patronage.

THE MIND READER: Warren William—Another William picture that the Saturday night patrons did not like, and they evidently advertised it, for my Sunday night attendance was less than a third of my usual attendance. Warren does some good acting, but he is poison to this town. Can't put over a picture featuring him since "The Match King." Allen Jenkins and Constance Cummings good. Played May 20-21.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SILVER DOLLAR: Edward G. Robinson—Very fine picture for the better class patrons. It did not draw for me. Played May 7-8.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

SILVER DOLLAR: Edward G. Robinson—This is a big picture if ever there was one. Wonderful production values, wonderful acting, cast, direction, etc., but for some reason this picture grossed less than any picture I have played in the middle of the week for quite some time. Why, I can't explain. Perhaps it was because beer was legalized. What an ending. It ends with the lowering of a casket, even though the casket is a silver one. Perhaps the ending had something to do with the drawing power.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

20,000 YEARS IN SING SING: Spencer Tracy, Bette Davis—Spencer Tracy is always O. K. You don't have to take scrip on this one. They will pay the real cash to see this one.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. General patronage.

Fox

BROADWAY BAD: Joan Blondell, Ricardo Cortez—They dislike pictures with "Broadway" in the title and they don't want "Bad" either. A big unmitigated flop. A sample of the tripe forced on us by block booking that is killing the business.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. Family patronage.

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—Good picture. Drew fair at the box office. Clara is coming back. Just give her a good story and she will do the rest. Running time, 75 minutes. Played April 30-May 1.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

CAVALCADE: Clive Brook—A flop. Fine picture. Why don't the producers make pictures for the one hundred twenty million American people?—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Namba, Idaho. Family patronage.

CAVALCADE: Clive Brook, Diana Wynyard—An excellent production. While not as great a picture as heralded, it is a wonderful picture nevertheless. This is my personal opinion. Recording not so good. It was not so well received by my patrons. The English accent spoiled it here. Several said they could not understand. Several left. My opinion is it's a "washout" for the small town. Played May 14-15-16.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

DANGEROUSLY YOURS: Warner Baxter, Miriam Jordan—Flopped.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. Family patronage.

DANGEROUSLY YOURS: Warner Baxter, Miriam Jordan—Fair program only. Played May 12-13.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

HANDLE WITH CARE: James Dunn—No box office. Just another picture made to collect on block booking contracts. That stuff will sink us all and kill the exhibitor.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. Family patronage.

HELLO SISTER: James Dunn, Boots Mallory, Zasu Pitts—This is the picture that Von Stroheim started and was run out and that is where it should have been definitely shelved. If he could have made it worse we can't see where. They tried to make another "Bad Girl" and Fox this year has had three or four just about the same treatment. Not a new idea in the lot of them. One reason why they stay at home and listen to the radio is mediocre, run of the mill pictures. I would be there, too, if I had to see very many of this kind. This was sold as "Walking Down Broadway." I doubt if Broadway even sees it. If Fox cannot make better pictures than the above, also "Humanity," "Bondage" and "Infernal Machine," all the lot of them not worth running, they had better see what is wrong that they have slipped so far down behind last year.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SAILOR'S LUCK: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—A good program picture. Played May 11-12.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

STATE FAIR: Janet Gaynor, Will Rogers, Lew Ayres, Sally Eilers, Norman Foster—Marvellous business. Couldn't believe it possible in these times.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. Family patronage.

STATE FAIR: All star—This picture broke a two-year record for attendance. If properly advertised it will make new records for your depression-day business. Pictures of this type should convince producers that the public wants good, clean stories, simply told in a simple, natural way. Every exhibitor in the United States should run this picture just as soon as possible. Too bad Fox had to insert one unnecessary smutty reel. Absolutely no reason to do so, but the producers just must have at least one reel of sex in every picture, so they put it in for good measure. But regardless of this I say "State Fair" is the best picture this year, and the box office will prove it. Fox needs a few more good pictures, as they have fallen down this year. "State Fair" will pull you out of the red. Get it just as soon as possible, and step on it. Played May 7-8-9.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Small city and rural patronage.

STATE FAIR: Janet Gaynor, Will Rogers—One of the best pictures I ever ran. Small town men can't afford to pass this one up. Play Fox pictures and stay out of the red.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. General patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers—One of Rogers's best. Running time, 73 minutes. Played April 16-17.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

TRICK FOR TRICK: Ralph Morgan, Victor Jory—Played right after "Hello Sister," and no business. Deals with seances and that line of stuff and with the picture following "Hello Sister," it did not have a chance. They build up a star and then tear him down with rotten pictures. Did not take in film rental three days. Just another weak one from Fox and they have plenty of them this year.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

YOUNG AMERICA: Spencer Tracy, Doris Kenyon—We swapped "Infernal Machine" for this picture, and made a good trade. Every small town will thoroughly enjoy "Young America." Put it on your family night or give it to your schools, churches and Boy Scouts. I call it as good a picture as "Skippy," "Sooky" or "Huckleberry Finn." A mighty good small town picture.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Small city and rural patronage.

ZOO IN BUDAPEST: Loretta Young, Gene Raymond—I can't understand where some of the critics get reason for such glowing raves on this one. Awful draggy for the first two-thirds and then some action, but nothing to rave about. Besides, this animal stuff is getting too monotonous. Running time, 85 minutes. Played May 16.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

Majestic

HEARTS OF HUMANITY: Jean Hersholt, Jackie Searl, Charles Delaney—The picture has heart appeal which will interest every man, woman and child. Jackie Searl gives an excellent performance. As a matter of fact, everyone in the cast depicts his part perfectly.—Pete Mallers, Riley Theatre, Ft. Wayne, Ind. General patronage.

PHANTOM EXPRESS: Sally Blane, J. Farrell McDonald, Wm. Collier, Jr.—This is one of the finest railroad pictures we have ever had the pleasure of exhibiting in our theatre. It played to excellent business.—Pete Mallers, Riley Theatre, Ft. Wayne, Ind. General patronage.

UNWRITTEN LAW: Greta Nissen, Skeets Gallagher, Mary Brian—This is an exceptionally good picture. Far superior to any independent picture we have shown this season.—Pete Mallers, Riley Theatre, Ft. Wayne, Ind. General patronage.

MGM

CLEAR ALL WIRES: Lee Tracy—A flop. Rotten title. People fed up on the whole tribe of newspaper men and publicity men who are a terrible kick to themselves but a pain to the rest of the world.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. Family patronage.

CLEAR ALL WIRES: Lee Tracy, Benita Hume—The star and support tried hard to make entertainment out of this story, but it took in too much territory. The poorest picture we ever played Tracy in, but he did his best and we will overlook this one.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

FAST LIFE: William Haines, Cliff Edwards—Leo can well roar over this production, for it is one of the best small town pictures I have exhibited for some time. Not a dull minute. Edwards gets more laughs than Haines. Why can't they make more features like this and cut the Chinese, horror, ganster and sob stuff? It is what the small town wants. Played May 11-12. Running time, 75 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Own Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

FLESH: Wallace Beery, Karen Morley—I call this a very good program picture. Gave general satisfaction, but these stars have been here in so much bigger and better pictures, this did not draw as it should.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

GABRIEL OVER THE WHITE HOUSE: Walter Huston—Poorest matinee, poorest Sunday night and poorest Monday night, so it holds the record of low business for Sunday and Monday, but certainly not the picture's fault. It's one of the best and most timely, but just a box office flop.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

THE OUTSIDER: English cast—All English cast in an all English made production that was too slow and boresome for this town. Jerked it before end of run. Three MGM flops in succession. If Thalberg doesn't come home soon and take charge of things we'll all be able to take a vacation without pay.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

RASPUTIN AND THE EMPRESS: Ethel, John and Lionel Barrymore—It did well. Some raved, some "no like." Idiotic in conveying the idea that the degenerate Czar was really a liberal democrat, but that was good moron fodder apparently.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. Family patronage.

THE SIDEWALKS OF NEW YORK: Buster Keaton, Anita Page—The best Keaton picture we have played so far. This is no doubt one of the best comedies on the market. If you want a knockout comedy for Friday-Saturday, don't fail to book this one. Running time 74 minutes. Played May 12-13.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

SON DAUGHTER: Helen Hayes, Ramon Novarro—Good acting. Wonderful cast. But when all is said it was just a Chinese flop here.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

STRANGE INTERLUDE: Norma Shearer, Clark Gable—I thought the acting poor and inadequate to the O'Neill play, but it did fairly in this tank. Some "no like." Gable is not an actor. A real actor was needed. Shearer is bad enough.—Herman H. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. Family patronage.

STRANGE INTERLUDE: Norma Shearer, Clark Gable—Wonderful acting by the stars and the whole cast, but a country town is no place to show pictures of this type. The big towns like them, but this picture gave about 50% satisfaction here. They told me the acting was great but the story rotten, and there you are. Played May 14-15.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

TODAY WE LIVE: Joan Crawford, Gary Cooper—Another war picture done on a big scale by three men and one woman. The men drank, fought and killed, and the woman cried. That's the story of "Today we Live." Had the director injected in the picture a little happy atmosphere, such as a party or banquet, this picture would have been a great hit. As it is many left with sad faces. This is not type of picture for Crawford. Running time, 115 minutes. Played May 18-19.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

WHAT! NO BEER?: Buster Keaton, Jimmy Durante—Very disappointing at the box office. Although it contains many very funny situations it is not up to the standard of Buster's last few pictures. Played May 14-15.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

Paramount

A BEDTIME STORY: Maurice Chevalier—Best Chevalier picture. Has a little of everything in it. Of course the baby steals the entire picture, and he is cute. Nothing risque in this.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

FROM HELL TO HEAVEN: All star cast—Pleased our Friday and Saturday patrons.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

KING OF THE JUNGLE: Frances Dee, Buster Crabbe—The public are sick of this imitative cycle, and this was a three-ringed flop.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. Family patronage.

KING OF THE JUNGLE: Buster Crabbe, Frances Dee—Very good jungle picture, although its theme is shifty and only partly jungle.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

LUXURY LINER: George Brent, Zita Johann—Good average picture with all the action taking place on a palace steamship. It's out of the ordinary, and makes a good evening's entertainment. Just enough comedy to relieve the dramatic situations, and gives us landlubbers an insight into the nature and workings of a large, modern ocean liner. It went over O. K.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Small city and rural patronage.

MURDERS IN THE ZOO: Charles Ruggles, Lionel Atwill—Ran this as midnight show, and seemed to go over good. Have run nothing but "horror" pictures at our midnight shows and this was different. Played May 13.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

PICK UP: George Raft, Sylvia Sydney—Clever, light romantic type. Pleased Sunday patrons. Played May 7-8.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

THE STORY OF TEMPLE DRAKE: Miriam Hopkins—Pleased about 70%. It's just another program picture. Running time, 70 minutes. Played May 21-22.—R. L. Matson, Crystal Theatre, Flandrau, S. D. General patronage.

TROUBLE IN PARADISE: Miriam Hopkins, Herbert Marshall, Kay Francis—Besides being clever to the "nth" degree, this picture is absolutely marvelous from a production standpoint, some new ideas introduced that put this piece of entertainment way out in front. Not too much credit can be given direction, and besides that a most capable cast. Business average four days.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

UNDER THE TONTO RIM: Stuart Erwin, Verna Hillie—Good picture with some wonderful western cattle scenes. Beautiful scenery, good photography and perfect sound. Small towns will enjoy this picture. Played May 5-6.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Small city and rural patronage.

THE WOMAN ACCUSED: Nancy Carroll, Cary Grant—Very good picture that pleased everybody. Running time, 70 minutes. Played May 17.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Principal

WITH WILLIAMSON BENEATH THE SEA: Very entertaining as well as educational, but this should be shown as part of a double bill. I had "Hallelujah I'm a Bum" with it, and some commented that it was a good show. Speaking of the "Hallelujah I'm a Bum"—an ace writer, Ben Hecht; Director Lewis Milestone, a capable trouper like Al Jolson, somehow or other failed to register. Perhaps it was the attempt to tell part of the story in rhythm that did not seem so successful. If you don't promise too much, this has pleasing moments. Business on this double bill about average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

RKO

THE GREAT JASPER: Richard Dix—Good picture to satisfactory business.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa Idaho. Family patronage.

KING KONG: Fay Wray, Bruce Cabot—A cross between "Frankenstein" and "Ingagi." A good picture of the "gyp" variety where entertainment requirements are 90% ballyhoo and 10% entertainment. RKO's last effort to make a comeback after a long series of mediums and "getbys." Two years ago one of these kind would have been great, but the public has shifted from the strong man acts to the snake charmer. Any more shock type pictures will sink the ship. If you stayed shy of shock pictures in the past, your patrons might allow this one. Some left before the show was over.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

KING KONG: Fay Wray, Bruce Cabot—A wonderful picture. Too big for me to comment upon. You have got to see it to appreciate the bigness of it. Gave 100% satisfaction here. Played May 7-8.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

LUCKY DEVILS: Bill Boyd—Good action picture, but weak on talent.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

MAN HUNT: Junior Durkin, Mrs. Wallace Reid—Business terrible. The continued production of many small false alarms instead of real pictures in smaller volume by major companies will break us all.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. Family patronage.

THE MONKEY'S PAW: Ivan Simpson, Louise Carter—Another of the interminable series of mystery and murder flops being ground out by incompetent producers.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. Family patronage.

THE PAST OF MARY HOLMES: Helen MacKellar, Eric Linden—This is a very interesting program picture. Good story and well acted. Gave satisfaction. And that is saying a lot nowadays.—Played May 18-19.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

PENGUIN POOL MURDER: Edna May Oliver—Bad flop. Public nauseated with mystery and murder. Oliver in proper vehicle paired with Roscoe Ates could duplicate the Summerville-Pitts combination.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. Family patronage.

SECRETS OF THE FRENCH POLICE: Gwili Andre, Frank Morgan—A very good program picture. Somewhat different from the rest.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

THE SPORT PARADE: Joel McCrea—Had been afraid this was too much like "Madison Square Garden," and kept it out, but was most pleasantly surprised and our patrons were out-and-out pleased. Clever comedy mingled with romance and action. Played May 5-6.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

THE SPORT PARADE: Joel McCrea, Marian Marsh—A very good program picture.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SWEEPINGS: Lionel Barrymore, Gloria Stuart—Splendid, high class drama. Pleased and held interest of even the younger class. Barrymore's work very, very good. Played May 14-15.—P. G. Estes, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

SWEEPINGS: Lionel Barrymore—Very good, but somewhat draggy.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

TOPAZE: John Barrymore, Myrna Loy—Not for small towns and only for a very few in big ones. Radio is too high hat. Perhaps because of Rockefeller and the arty angles that derive from the big dough and especially the wives of the big doughboys.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. Family patronage.

TOPAZE: John Barrymore, Myrna Loy—The six that stayed to the finish thought it fair. I wonder when RKO will start making pictures.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. General patronage.

Universal

AIR MAIL: Pat O'Brien, Ralph Bellamy—Here is a real one, fellows. One of the best pictures of this type that we have ever run. Outside of the tragic death of the mail pilot who was burned alive, there was no fault to find in the picture. Sorry this was not eliminated. Business punk. Running time, 83 minutes. Played May 13-14.—Estes & Estes, Merry Land Theatre, Addison, Mich. Small town patronage.

AIR MAIL: Ralph Bellamy—Good picture. Running time, 74 minutes. Played April 23-24.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BE MINE TONIGHT: Jan Kiepura, Magda Schneider—Universal's prize package of the year closed here last night as the prize flop of the season. "Uncle Carl" and everyone else who praised it are right as far as they go. The music is the finest we have ever heard on a screen. On the other hand, the dialogue is probably the poorest recording and the hardest to understand we have heard in years. The voice of the unknown leading man is superb, but what the artists, who have ballyhooed the picture, have neglected to tell us, is that with the exception of the theme song (which is in English if you can understand it), all the other outstanding songs are grand opera. There will be only two possible reactions to this one. People who go in for tenors and grand opera will like it, the vast majority of theatre patrons will not understand it and they will not like it. "Be Mine Tonight" should be sold as grand opera through the local choral societies, the school music departments and local musicians. Let us emphatically state that this picture is not "small town entertainment."—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronale.

FAST COMPANIONS: Tom Brown, Maureen O'Sullivan—Very good. Did not draw for me. Played May 4-5.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

THE FIGHTING PRESIDENT: We paid more money for this, but it was a complete flop. Cut-ins and outs. No drawing power because of bad reports from Spartanburg, where it ran the week before. It might be all right as a souvenir for Mr. Roosevelt, but proved a loss here.—Amuzu Theatre, Inman, S. C. General patronage.

FLAMING GUNS: Tom Mix—Personally, think this the best picture Tom ever made. No unnecessary shooting, he did not fight half-dozen men single handed, the heroine was fine, and the heroine's father, William Farnum, was no doubt partly responsible for such a good picture. William Farnum was excellent. Played May 13.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

HIDDEN GOLD: Tom Mix—Tom Mix weakened his other pictures when he made "My Pal, The King," because that, in our opinion, was the best he ever made. "Hidden Gold" proved a poor drawing card for us. In fact, just another western.—Amuzu Theatre, Inman, S. C. General patronage.

THE MUMMY: Boris Karloff—A complete flop at the box office. No more of this type of picture for me. The people are sick and tired of gruesome pictures. They just won't come. Running time, 72 minutes. Played May 14-15.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

NAGANA: Just fair. Did not draw.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. General patronage.

PRIVATE JONES: Lee Tracy, Gloria Stuart—Good picture to satisfactory business.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. Family patronage.

ROME EXPRESS: Esther Ralston, Conrad Veidt—Carl will not get any hurrahs for releasing this one, as there have not been many reports in "What the Picture Did for Me" on it, but what few did report were right that the recording is rotten. I never made a dollar on a foreign made picture and thought that I had taken the cure, but once a sucker you always double back once in a while and this is one of those times. It is a safe bet to screen these foreign pictures, but I didn't and took a little of the high pressure salesman talk to heart, along with some favorable criticisms that I saw. It may be a wow on Broadway, but it is a flop in this town. Further, in looking over the spots in the Herald's reports of box office, I can't see where it got a first run. Universal has a foreign complex, due I think to the fact that Carl has a weakness for the pictures that come from his birthplace. Swap it if you can. It will hit a lot of walkouts and much adverse criticism from your patrons.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Warner

HARD TO HANDLE: James Cagney—Excellent entertainment. Chuck full of action and comedy. Don't give all the credit to Cagney. The supporting members of the cast are equally good. The story is good. Sound and photography O. K. Played May 12-13.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Small city and rural patronage.

I AM A FUGITIVE FROM A CHAIN GANG: Paul Muni—Wonderful picture, and it still has marvellous drawing power. If you haven't played it, by all means do so. You will get people out that you have never seen before. I used the trailer and circus heralds. Played May 2-3.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

LADIES THEY TALK ABOUT: Barbara Stanwyck—I call this a mighty good picture. The star always good, cast fine, story interesting. Gave satisfaction. Played May 9-10.—Bert Silver, Silver family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

ONE WAY PASSAGE: Kay Francis, Wm. Powell—Splendid picture. It did not draw any extra business but it certainly pleased. Played May 9-10.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

THE PARACHUTE JUMPER: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—Very good. Drawing power was only fair for me. Played May 11-12.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General Patronage.

THE WORKING MAN: George Arliss—This is one of the nicest produced, acted and directed pictures in a long time. Story very good and interesting from start to finish without a dull moment. It's a dirty shame the "shieks" and "shebas" won't give Arliss a tumble, but there being no sex appeal or dirt in his pictures, they are not interested. I had a world of patrons go out of their way to tell me how they enjoyed this one and thanks be for that, in this sad day of so many mediocre, poor and censorable offerings. Running time, 75 minutes. Played May 21-22.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

World Wide

COME ON, TARZAN: Ken Maynard—A good western picture for Saturday crowd. They all liked it.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HELL FIRE AUSTIN: Ken Maynard—This proved to be excellent entertainment for our mid-week bargain show fans. Patrons seemed to enjoy this western more than any that we have shown for some time. Consider Ken Maynard the best rider on the screen. His pictures are always filled with action. Running time, 70 minutes. Played May 17-18.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Rural patronage.

RACE TRACK: Leo Carrillo—Splendid picture. Drew only fairly well but pleased. Played May 16.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

THOSE WE LOVE: Mary Astor, Kenneth MacKenna—Just fair. Running time, 68 minutes. Played April 21-22.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighboring patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

HIS VACATION: Sunrise Comedy—Nothing to write home about. Seemed to please the kids.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Rural patronage.

MIND DOESN'T MATTER: Sunrise Comedies—Only fair comedy. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PARTNERS TWO: Alexander Carr—A very funny two-reel comedy. Better than the average.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.—Town and country patronage.

SCRAPPY: Cartoon—Good. Running time, 7 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SEEING STARS: Krazy Kat Cartoons—The best cartoon that we have shown in many a day. If they were all as good as this one we would never complain. Pleased 100%. Running time, 6 minutes.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Rural patronage.

SPEED IN THE GAY NINETIES: Andy Clyde—Just an average comedy. Print received in very poor condition. Sound just fair. Have shown worse comedies, but this one could have been much better.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Rural patronage.

MGM

ALUM AND EVE: Zasu Pitts, Thelma Todd—A good Pitts-Todd comedy. Always sure of a good attendance when I run a Zasu Pitts comedy.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

BLOCK AND TACKLE: Sport Champions—Very interesting where people are interested in football.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

FISH HOOKEY: Our Gang—The best "Our Gang" ever made. Plenty of laughs. Mary Gorman and Mickey Daniels were good.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MR. BRIDE: Charley Chase—Very silly. Two reels.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

NATURE IN THE WRONG: Charley Chase—This is a good one. Better than some features. Very funny. Give this guy the stories and he will make them.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.—Town and country patronage.

SNEAK EASILY: Zasu Pitts, Thelma Todd—Just an ordinary comedy. Too much similarity to previous comedy. It was played on Saturday and brought a few laughs from the kids. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

TAXI FOR TWO: Taxi Boys—Average Taxi Boys comedy. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

THEIR FIRST MISTAKE: Laurel and Hardy—Judging from the laughs, this one certainly pleased. Laurel and Hardy adopt a baby and you can imagine the rest. Two reels.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

Paramount

BETTY BOOP'S CRAZY INVENTIONS: A good filler any time.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

BLUE OF THE NIGHT: Bing Crosby—Is good on any program.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

BLUE OF THE NIGHT: Bing Crosby—Very good.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

THE DENTIST: W. C. Fields—Rotten.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

SHORT SUBJECTS: I find all Paramount shorts good, except the "Hollywood on Parade" and the "Sport Eye View." The sound is bad on the last named subjects. Grantland Rice must have poor sound equipment for his unit, as it was bad with the Pathe and RKO subjects also. The same theory applies for parts of "Hollywood on Parade." Paramount has the best sound on all other subjects, but the two mentioned should be corrected. Recently Maurice Chevalier appeared in "Hollywood on Parade No. 4" and the sound was simply awful. The acts, one and two reels, the "Pictorials," "Screen Songs," "Screen Souvenirs," "Newsreels" and "Talkartoons" are good. The color scenes in some of the "Pictorials" are fine, and make this an outstanding reel. People appreciate this touch of color, and it helps the whole program. There never was a time when color was needed or appreciated more than at present. Music and dancing are very popular again, and more consideration should be given musicals. I have noticed that when we get a good color or musical reel that my patrons see it over twice. Give us more color.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Small city and rural patronage.

THE SINGING BOXER: Donald Novis—Singing by Novis very good. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

RKO

HOKUM HOTEL: Aesops Fables—Take-off on "Grand Hotel," and very clever. One reel.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

LOOPS, MY DEAR: Harry Sweet—First good RKO comedy we've had for a long time. Two reels.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

MICKEY'S RACE: Mickey McGuire—A good kid comedy.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.—Town and country patronage.

OPENING NIGHT: Aesop Fable—One of the best one-reel cartoons we ever played.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.—Town and country patronage.

A SPANISH TWIST: Tom and Jerry—Very good.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb.

Universal

DOWN MEMORY LANE: Texas Guinan, Louis Sobol—Disappointing. One reel.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

THE HOLD UP: Morton Downey—Very good. Two reels.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

LIGHTS OUT: James Gleason—No good. If producers would put in more action and less dialogue, maybe people could get more kick out of these nothings labeled comedies. Running time, 18 minutes.—Estes & Estes, Marry Land Theatre, Addison, Mich. Small town patronage.

THE MERRY DOG: Pooch the Pup Cartoon—Good stuff. Running time, 10 minutes.—Estes & Estes, Merry Land Theatre, Addison, Mich. Small town patronage.

OCEAN HOP: Oswald the Rabbit—Good. Running time, 9 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

THE PLUMBER: Oswald the Rabbit—Very good. Running time, 10 minutes.—Estes & Estes, Merry Land Theatre, Addison, Mich. Small town patronage.

THE PLUMBER: Oswald the Rabbit—Only fair. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

ABE LYMAN AND BAND—Another Melody Master series, very entertaining and music very good. Received many comments on this one-reel musical. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BOSKO'S DIZZY DATE: Looney Tune—Good. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BOSKO'S DIZZY DATE: Looney Tune Cartoon—Very good cartoon. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

THE BUILD-UP: Jack Haley—Good comedy, singing and music. Running time, 16 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

C'EST PARIS: Technicolor Musical—Splendid. Running time, two reels.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

CONTACT: Pepper Pot Series—Good. Running time, 9 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

FIFI: Broadway Brevities—Here is a musical of the higher type taken from Victor Herbert's "Mademoiselle Modiste." Of the sentimental type but a mighty fine morsel of rare entertainment and while of higher type than the usual musical, it's not over the head of anyone. Running time, 20 minutes.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

I WISH I HAD WINGS: Merry Melody—Very good cartoon. Running time, 7 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

LITTLE WHITE LIES: A fine single-reel short with some good trick photography and color effects.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

A MODERN CINDERELLA: Ruth Etting—A Broadway Brevity, but a poor one. It has very little entertainment value. Running time, two reels.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

New Reports Come From San Salvador

Continuing his reports on the motion pictures that come to his attention as manager of the Meardi-Hermanos circuit in San Salvador, El Salvador, Central America, Mr. O. Beer has this to say about the latest group:

NIGHT COURT: MGM, with Phillips Holmes, Walter Huston, Lewis Stone and Anita Page—One of the outstanding MGM hits. Old Leo's pictures sell themselves at this end. Lewis Stone is always a draw. This will please everyone. Running time, 90 minutes. Played March 26.

TRADER HORN: MGM, with Edwina Booth, Duncan Renaldo and Harry Carey—Ran it again (we released it about two years ago) and made much money with it, in spite of two other similar pictures shown by us a short time ago. Running time, 120 minutes. Played March 25.

LOVE IN THE RING: Terra (German), with Max Schmeling, Renate Muller—After having seen this picture one finds out that the treaty of Versailles does not cover any damage Germany is making to the world. The most rotten picture I have ever seen. The advertising said that it has songs in half a dozen languages, but what happens is that a bunch of drunkards start occasional yells and if at the same time someone makes noise on a piano, then they call it songs in different languages. Running time, 90 minutes. Played April 29.

HOLLYWOOD CIUDAD DE ENSUENOS: Universal, with José Bohr, Lia Tora and Nancy Drexel—The second best moneymaker we got the last six months. This and "Frankenstein" were the two best pictures we got, the only ones which were better than the nine best pictures of MGM, which is the best company. José Bohr has a fine drawing power. All Spanish talking. Running time, 75 minutes. Played April 2.

CONGORILLA: Fox, with Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson—A good draw, although the third picture of the same style. In the class, average business. In the gallery, we sold every ticket in three consecutive shows. Running time, 85 minutes. Played April 22.

THE WASHINGTON MASQUERADE: MGM, with Lionel Barrymore and Karen Morley—One of the MGM hits. It is interesting that this picture, which should be difficult to understand by the average patron, as political situation is here different from U. S. A., was a hit, as our patrons, owing to the fine quality of old Leo's pictures, rush to every MGM release. Running time, 90 minutes. Played March 19.

THE MAN I KILLED: Paramount, with Lionel Barrymore, Phillips Holmes and Nancy Carroll—A fine picture, nevertheless a failure for us. Paramount sent us such a lot of failures in their last contract that our patrons expect always to see a "Sous Les Toits De Paris," "This Is the Night," "A Man of the World," etc. Made 35% less than MGM's "Washington Masquerade," although it should have been the better picture for a Latin American country. Running time, 80 minutes. Played April 23.

Shorts

LE VENDEUR DE PIANOS: Paramount, with Wiener & Doucet—An outstanding failure among the big lot of Paramount failures we got the last six months. Sent it back, so it didn't hurt business. This has a bit of French talking, but is dull and dumb.

WIENER & DOUCET: Paramount, with Wiener & Doucet—The best picture of those two guys, but still far below the average shorts we get from other firms.

RAQUEL MELLER: Fox, with Raquel Meller—Spanish singing. Had to cut it during the run because our patrons protested against it.

THE SQUARE RIGGER: Fox—A fine picture. A Polish school sailing vessel. Some songs. Interesting views.

JOE HEWITT CALLS TURN ON SOPHISTICATES

Does the public want sophisticated pictures? Nothing new as a question; it's as old as the motion picture itself, but Joe Hewitt, that faithful contributor to the Department, rises at the Lincoln theatre, Robinson, Ill., to make some pertinent remarks. Says Joe:

"Mae West is reported as saying or inferring that the public does not want 'sweet and simple stories'.

"Perhaps she's right! They do not want this type of story from Mae West. But take it from one who has been fighting censorship, taxes and other adverse legislation for 27 years: If the type of story Miss West THINKS the public wants is continued to be forced onto the exhibitor, all I can say is that within a very short time we will be faced with such rigid legislation that we will be showing nothing but Sunday school pictures to our patrons, especially right now when the bluenoses have more time to pay attention to laws other than prohibition.

"Does Miss West mean to imply that Janet Gaynor, Mary Pickford, Will Rogers, et al., because of their simple and sweet type are not or have not been our biggest successes?

"Yes, Miss West, you may think you know what the audience wants, which type also includes the late efforts of McLaglen and Lowe and Wheeler and Woolsey, but if I get what you mean, we'll be showing 'em at stag shows.

"Mr. Hays and his organization, as well as all well-thinking exhibitors, deplore the day when the 'sweet and simple' type of story will be taken from us, and substituted in its place the type Miss West refers to, which of course 'can be made', but is it advisable?"

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

OBSERVATIONS

By JOHN W. CREAMER

Manager, Fox-Waldo Theatre, Kansas City, Mo.

I HAVE always been a firm believer in the old saying that "One can learn more by keeping his eyes and ears open, and his mouth closed" . . . . hence a few observations. . . . In going around the country quite a bit . . . . I notice . . . .

EXHIBITORS . . . . are not getting the personal touch . . . . that personal atmosphere into their places of business . . . . they do not know their patrons. . . . I seldom see exhibitors even in the smaller towns, taking tickets at the door . . . . and greeting their patrons with a "Hello, Bill" . . . . "Good evening, Mrs. Smith" . . . . instead this important task is left to a young chap . . . . whose main interest is his "date" after the show . . . . or his pay check on Saturday. . . . In Paducah, Kentucky, one enterprising manager . . . . has his day's running schedule . . . . neatly typed and displayed in his front box office window . . . . this probably saves his cashier answering a lot of silly questions that other cashiers have to put up with. . . . Recently passing through a Missouri town . . . . I looked for the theatre . . . . and my gaze was met by a front . . . . consisting of at least seven or eight one sheet frames . . . . portable type . . . . leaned one next to the other clear across the glass doors . . . . from sidewall to sidewall. . . . Now understand these one sheet frames were in addition to numerous other frames that were fastened to the theatre front. . . . This exhibitor probably never heard of the true saying . . . . "All display is no display". . . . In another town . . . . a high class house was playing "Blondie Johnson" for an admission of . . . . 5c and 10c . . . . Wow! . . . . and first run, too. . . .

"FAN MAGAZINES". . . . It seems to me that our patrons know more about our business, that is . . . . the producing end, than we do. . . . I have talked with many exhibitors . . . . they all tell me . . . . "The fan magaiznes and their critics are hurting our business". . . . It is true that many a person in reading a criticism in his or her favorite Hollywood magazine . . . . will pay too much attention to what the critic is raving about . . . . which reminds me of a patron that I used to have in an Iowa town . . . . this man, a well educated person, used to tell me that he would never go to a picture show unless a certain magazine recommended that certain feature as being worthy of seeing. . . . I used to remonstrate with this gentleman . . . . and asked him "Why do you, with the brain you have . . . . allow someone else to pick your entertainment for you? . . . Do you allow someone else to select the food you eat? . . . Do you allow another person to select what you wear?". . . . Verily the ways of some are beyond all reckoning . . . . and they miss a lot of mighty fine entertainment.

MANAGERS . . . . seem to have lost their old time pep . . . . without a doubt something is causing it . . . . anyway there seems to be too much of a lack of initiative . . . . a fear to go ahead and to stand or fall on the results of their decisions. . . . . I was recently looking at the front of a house, as I stood talking to the manager . . . . I couldn't help but notice the empty lamp sockets . . . . dozens of them. . . . There used to be a saying "You can judge a theatre by the dead lamp bulbs on the front." . . .

EMPLOYEES . . . . Many are called but few are chosen . . . . by that I mean . . . . many theatre employees have the chance, the opportunity . . . . to advance and make something out of themselves . . . . but so few do . . . . why is it? . . . . Is it due to the managers they work under? . . . . perhaps . . . . but even that shouldn't stop them. . . . I have had in my power the chance to advance many employees . . . . some of these I did . . . . many of these I did not . . . . and mainly for the reason that they did not take an interest in the operation of my theatre. . . . . I firmly believe that in these trying times . . . . that it should be the duty of every employee to do all within his power to increase patronage . . . . and every employee should be careful of items of expense, over which he has control . . . . just as much as if he himself had to pay the bill when due. . . .

ADVERTISING . . . . ah, there is the always important item of operation . . . . by the way, are the expert ad men of today preparing someone else to follow in their footsteps? . . . Are they imparting the knowledge gained in years gone by, to someone who can carry on? . . . Where are the advertising men of the future coming from? . . . There are a lot of good young managers who should be trained by men such as my old friend Howard Jameyson, the dean of theatre ad men.

PRESS BOOKS . . . . it seems like after all the years exhibitors have been roasting the press books that the producers would get wise to the fact . . . . that we exhibitors . . . . want press books that will help us sell the picture to our patrons . . . . and not flashy, gaudy books that are trying to sell the picture to us. . . . . for God knows we have bought the picture and need help to sell it to others . . . . not ourselves. . . . .

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Can you blame the old lady for thinking that "shorts" are sold in theatres, with lobbies cluttered up these days with all sorts of merchandise. Don Wiersum, of Grand Rapids, Mich., sent this idea in and Cartoonist Dick did the rest. Get the facial expression!

WIGHT REPORTS FROM YAKIMA VALLEY WITH INTERESTING SLANTS

News from Yakima Valley, Wash., is always welcome news when received by this department, and we are of the opinion showmen agree with us, especially if said information relates to Milt Wight's show selling.

A glance through eight pages of a Yakima newspaper discloses that Milt knows his way 'round the editor's office, according to front page, editorial section and other portions devoted to generous plugs on "Movie Month." He modestly admits having stood at the editor's shoulder while that corking editorial took copy form, but what's that? More power to his ability as a salesman! In fact, the idea was so well sold that the editor personally saw that reprints were made and distributed to every merchant in town. Since cooperative ads had never met with much enthusiasm in Yakima, it was Wight's idea that the campaign would lay a foundation for future tie-ups.

We note that Milt also tried out one of those "One Cent" sales, whereby two admissions are given with one regular admission plus one cent, and met with marked success. The stunt was run day and date with another "One Cent" sale advertised by a local drug concern and both theatre and store cooperated with appropriate advertising copy, even to the extent of having a girl in theatre uniform preside over a booth in the drug store to sell tickets.

Wight has a scattered and therefore unwieldy territory to cover out of Yakima and perforce utilizes every available medium to obtain productive coverage. In addition to advertising in three weekly newspapers he lifts his ads at opportune times and sends them out through the mails. The whole territory, both urban and rural, is also covered with dodgers rolled up in newspapers from Walla Walla, a city 40 miles distant. Other coverage is obtained by sending out monthly bookings in personal letter form; supplying the local telephone exchange with current programs to answer inquiries from out of town, and employment of a regular staff of boys to make house to house distribution of dodgers, etc. A guest ticket to the show always takes care of a boy and he generally comes to the theatre with another member of the family, consequently turning the deal into a two-for-one.

In short, Wight is taking advantage of every possible means to overcome the handicap of limited newspaper circulation in a wide territory and, to all account, appears to be getting on pretty well in the matter of solving his problem. You'll hear again from him in the near future.

Waldron's Give-Away!

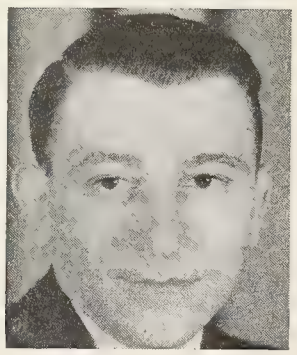
Bill Waldron, manager of the Central Theatre, Newark, N. J., recently engineered a lamp give-away in connection with a theatrical exploitation company in New York City that is reported as a knockout for both theatre and merchant. The storekeepers pay all expenses attached to the deal and the give-away is conducted along usual lines.

AMIDON IS DOING NICELY WITH HIS LATONIA DISPLAYS

We have at hand an interesting little snap-shot of a display made for "Hypnotized" by Elmer Amidon, partner-manager of the Latonia Theatre, Oil City, Pa., and it's too bad the print is too faint to permit reproduction.

At any rate, the display featured the faces of Moran and Mack. Circles from the centre out were black, dark purple, lavender, blue, light blue with a background of turquoise blue. The faces of Moran and Mack were cut from beaverboard and set out about three-quarters of an inch and colored dark grey and black. Bars on the sides from inside out were yellow, orange and red. Moran and Mack lettering was cut out and covered with silver flitter. The title was done in orange and face decorations in yellow shaded with black. The base of the display was covered with silver paper.

We hope anyone interested in constructing a similar display will be able to complete the job with aid of the above description. Despite the fact that Amidon hasn't been doing art work all his life he shows real talent in this direction and we'll be on the lookout for further examples of his work. Just one thing, Elmer, send along a larger and sharper print of the next one you pass along.



Brother, Can You Spare a Dime?

"Just think for a moment—isn't there someone in your circle of friends who, through circumstances hasn't been able to afford a movie in many months? Someone out of work—who hasn't had a good laugh in a long, long time. And here's another suggestion: adopt a Movie Kiddie! Some poor tot whose daddie has been out of work. . . . What better use could you make of a few pennies?" . . .

The above excerpts and more like them appeared on the back of a postcard sent out on a mailing list by Schine's State Theatre, Cortland, N. Y. Maybe you'd like to try the gag?

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Robert Menches is another Round Tabler who frankly admits that the show bug bit him in early youth and has since held him firmly in its grip.

Bob was born in Canton, Ohio, in the year 1897 and there received his education at St. Bernard's School. At 15 years of age he donned an usher's uniform and went to work in a local theatre. From this post he was promoted to the doorman's job; then to assistant manager, and so on up to the office of manager. He is at present located at the Liberty Theatre, Akron, Ohio, where he functions as manager and vice-president of the corporation operating the Liberty.

Showbusiness still holds the same fascination for Bob as the day he entered it, for he informs the Club that he has no intention of ever leaving it for another field. Yes, he's married and the father of three children.

ORGANIZING THE "YOUNG TIMERS"

Efforts of L. W. Carroll Have Produced Enthusiastic Booster Army of 8 Hundred Active Boys and Girls in Burlington

FOLLOWING closely the lines of a plan fostered by the Capital Theatre, Dover, Del., which was outlined in this department some time ago, L. W. Carroll, of the Flynn and Majestic Theatres, Burlington, Vt., recently began formation of his "Young Timers Club." Starting with a hand-picked group of local youngsters he expanded the organization until it now numbers several hundred enthusiastic boys and girls.

As with all clubs of this kind, the purpose back of the idea is to boost Saturday matinee trade and carry theatre good will to parents through the medium of the children. Boys and girls from 5 to 15 years of age are admitted to membership. The first time they attend any show they are given an application card, requesting such information as name and address, school, grade, name of teacher, approval of parent and guardian, how many members of family attend the theatre and as to musical or dancing talent of applicant. Numerals are provided to designate age, as is space to check off issues of cards, club buttons, numbers, letters mailed, stencil, etc.

Identification Cards

When the application card is properly filled out and returned the youngsters are given an identification card which entitles the holder to a free show the following Saturday. They are also assigned a number which allows participation for the several guest tickets given away each week in the usual fashion to members between the ages of 5 and 12 years.

Those between the ages of 12 and 15 years are admitted to either theatre at any time during the week for ten cents on presentation of their cards; otherwise, they would have to pay adult admission rate. A president, vice president and two flag escorts are elected by members every four weeks, during which time these officers are admitted free. Membership cards are issued for a period of two months, with the cashier checking the attendance records each Saturday. If it is found that the older members are not taking an active part in club meetings and only using their cards to take advantage of the ten cent rate, they are dropped.

Special Shows

A special show is put on for the Young Timers each Saturday at 1.15 P. M. and they are permitted to stay through the regular show, which starts at 2 P. M. A chapter of a serial is used as part of the club program and shown at no other performance. When it happens that the theatre holding the club meeting has an adult picture scheduled for showing that day the club marches en masse to the other house to see a more suitable film. The local Better Films Committee has heartily approved this policy.

In addition to regular meetings since organization Carroll featured for his Young Timers an Xmas Party, New Year's Show, a Minstrel Show and a Broncho Race, all of which were received with tremendous response.

During the Holidays

The Xmas party was staged on a Saturday and each youngster was greeted by Santa Claus and given a bag of candy donated by a local merchant in lieu of advertising imprint on bag. At the New Year's Whoopee party each member was handed a hat and noise maker when entering the theatre. It is interesting to note that while the kids nearly raised the roof off the house during the party, all were quiet as mice when the 2-o'clock show got under way.

The cast of the Minstrel show consisted of 94 Young Timers and ran for one hour. Originally intended as just an entertainment unit for a Saturday meeting, the youngsters begged so to put it on in the evening for their parents that they were allowed to repeat the show. The following morning the head of the local radio broadcasting station phoned and requested use of the highlights for a half-hour's broadcast.

The Broncho race probably gave the youngsters and theatres more publicity than any other stunt since the club was organized. Permission was obtained from the Board of Aldermen to rope off the portion of Main street in front of the theatre and the race was held at 4 P. M. on a Saturday afternoon. Big flood lights were erected on the marquee and city authorities were prevailed upon to turn on the street lights an hour earlier. Although the race was staged on one of the coldest days last winter, ropes were necessary to keep adult spectators in line and bets placed on the several contestants who rode the mechanical nags provided real race track atmosphere.

Boys interested in aviation are given instruction in the building of model planes at each meeting. The theatre furnishes the material and Carroll's assistant takes care of this phase of the club. The work is done in the dressing room and as long as the boys go about their tasks in a quiet way the rooms are open to them any time during the week. At this writing there are twenty-odd model planes in the lobby as evidence of the boys' handiwork.

Further evidence of cooperation on part of the theatre is seen in a few mimeographed forms used to entertain and instruct members of the club. One is headed, "Can You Name the Parts of This Ship?" There follows a sketch of the schooner used in "Tess of Storm Country," with parts designated by number and space to fill in answers. Another form is devoted to the "Young Timers Club Song," written to the tune of "Yankee Doodle" by a local citizen. Members were urged to get busy and write additional verses for the song. This same form called attention to a forthcoming "Button Collection" contest. Still another form shows how the attendance record is kept. All members from 100 up are run off and mimeographed sheets, about 500 to a page, so that it is a comparatively easy matter for the cashier to check them off as the youngters pass the box office.

Work Well Justified

To members of the Round Table interested in a Club such as outlined above, Manager Carroll cautions that the move entails considerable work. In order to keep interest at the proper pitch the program must be interesting and he plans them at least one week ahead. However, as far as his labors are concerned, he feels well repaid by way of enjoyment the children receive as the result of his efforts, to say nothing of the indirect advertising value of seven or eight hundred children talking Flynn and Majestic theatres at home, in the schools and on the streets.

GLASE PROMOTED!

Paul Glase, formerly assistant to A. Frank O'Brien, city manager of Wilmer & Vincent theatres in Reading, Pa., and in direct charge of the State Theatre there, recently succeeded to his chief's post following the latter's assignment to the Wilmer & Vincent district managership in Richmond, Va. Glase will now make his headquarters at the Embassy in Reading.

HERMAN COHEN DID SPLENDID WORK ON 'BE MINE' CAMPAIGN

Herman Cohen, manager, and Charles Leonard, publicity manager for the United Artists Theatre, San Francisco, gave "Be Mine Tonight" a campaign that had the whole city talking about the picture and whistling its songs!

Having implicit faith in the soundness of poster advertising, they covered the city with 120 24-sheets. Their newspaper campaign started a week in advance with small spot ads and built up to a smash three-columns by 13 inches announcement that was staggered through the day before opening to the first day after the opening. Special Italian, French, German, Swiss and Russian ads were carried in the foreign language newspapers.

Complete radio coverage in the San Francisco area was secured through the co-operation of Luckey Wilber, Pacific Coast manager for Harms, Inc., publishers of "Tell Me Tonight," the hit song from the picture. This coverage included a plug over every radio station with a mention of the picture and the theatre. Many of the programs using the number were broadcast from popular hotel rooms adding materially to the value of the plugs.

Music stores and music departments of large department stores in all parts of the city devoted large window and interior displays to the song. The feature window was in one of the Kress stores where a whole window was given over to a display of a three-sheet poster mounted and cut up into a jig saw puzzle. This poster was surrounded with displays of the song cover. Twenty pairs of guest tickets were offered passersby interested in solving the puzzle. The stunt attracted wide attention and hundreds of persons stopped to hand in their guess.

To build up additional word of mouth advertising personal contacts were made with all local musical organizations, parent-teacher associations, the Board of Education and women's clubs.

CONVICT BALLY!

Photo above shows convict and overseer phase of campaign waged in behalf of "Laughter in Hell" by Manager Simon Griever of the Adams Theatre, Detroit, Mich., assisted by Duke Hickey, Universal exploiteer. The man who impersonated the overseer was an expert whip-cracker and gave demonstrations of cutting paper and cigarettes from mouth.

HENGER'S "MUMMY"

George Henger, manager of the Warner-Midwest Theatre, Oklahoma City, used the display pictured above as an advance announcement on "Mummy." It was placed in one corner of the inner lobby and attracted favorable comment.

ALL THAT TALK ABOUT "SCRIP" GAVE SAUL L. GOLDSTEIN GOOD IDEA

The hard times and bank holiday gags which came into Club headquarters included one from Saul L. "Goldies" Goldstein, manager of the Ideal Theatre in Roxbury, Mass., in the form of the much talked about "scrip"—only it wasn't scrip at all.

The color of the fake certificate will not permit reproduction so we'll place emphasis on the words which stood out in caps: "THIS preSCRIPtion IS a GOOD cure FOR your blues!" (numerals signifying $25 were on each upper end of certificate). More copy follows: "In useful, attractive gifts given absolutely free to lucky patrons—men, women and children—every Saturday evening" (dates).

So you will perceive that the words above in caps apparently read: "This Scrip Is Good for $25," with the words in lower case taking out the sting. Goldstein advises us that the gag was an attention getter and wished to pass it along the line. Thanks to him.

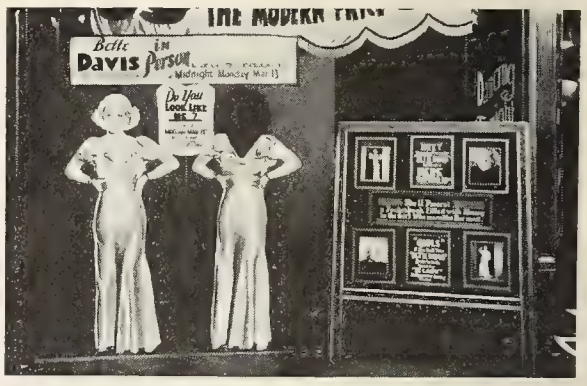
Give-Aways Popular Here!

Thrown into the discard for several months, Gift Nights are again popular in Kansas City neighborhood houses, according to report. However, instead of costly articles such as motor cars, electric refrigerators, etc., current give-aways are being confined to sets of china and glassware, which are distributed piecemeal. Some houses are restricting the policy to jig-saw puzzles. In most cases the gifts are purchased from neighborhood merchants, thus gaining good will.

JAKE ROSENTHAL IS STILL GAGGING HIS WAY THROUGH LIFE

Always in a happy frame of mind, even though under the weather of late, Jake Rosenthal, manager of the Iowa Theatre, Waterloo, Iowa, continues to gag his way through life, and we don't mean the kind of gagging one goes to see a medico about. What Jake does is to include some little touch here and there, such as in newspaper ads and other mediums, which constantly keep the name of Rosenthal and Iowa before the public eye.

For instance, during the recent "Bank Holiday" he ran an ad with the following copy: "During the Bank Holiday or During Money Shortage we will accept diamonds, emeralds, other family jewels, automobiles ('32 and '33 models), farm mortgages, cows, turkeys and radio sets in lieu of admission to the Iowa Theatre. (P. S. We have utmost confidence in our country's future, the same as you should Always have confidence that you'll see the best show in town at the Iowa."



Among his recent activities was a campaign on "20,000 Years in Sing Sing," in which he used street laborors dressed in striped suits and swinging picks. They carried Iowa Theatre copy on their backs.

Next time we may be able to set forth details of a "Big Iowa Corn Show," which Jake is planning for a Saturday afternoon in the near future. He intends to let the farmers in to the "best show in town" for a bushel of 10 cent corn and then turn it over to the Salvation Army to grind up for local needs. How would the Iowa look with a big pile of golden corn out in front, asks Jake?

Lorence Now Independent!

Herman Lorence, former manager of the Strand and Cataract Theatres, Niagara Falls, N. Y., and who recently took over motion picture houses in Youngsville and Albion, Pa., is actively engaged in learning how it feels to be an independent owner-manager. The Club will expect to hear from him just as soon as the throes of taking over operation of two theatres passes the first stage.

RESEMBLANCE!

Bette Davis, Warner star, was enlisted into service when the "42nd Street Special" arrived in New York. Richard M. Decker, major domo of Empire Ballroom, and a showman of long standing, effected a tie-up with the Strand Theatre whereby girls who believed they looked like the blonde star were invited to participate in a stunt judging the closest resemblance. A life-size cut-out of the movie actress was used as model, while another cut-out, as the photo shows, with head removed, was the testing block for hopeful entrants. The stunt proved a natural for both theatre and ballroom.

QUICK SERVICE IDEAS THAT WORKED

JACK LYKES, always on the job at Loew's Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, pulled a neat gag in connection with the engagement of "Looking Forward" by placing a large leather bound book in the lobby on which patrons will record impressions in praise of President Roosevelt. When 10,000 signatures have been affixed, Jack will send the book to the President. . . .

SID GRAUMAN, of Grauman's Chinese, Los Angeles, has arranged to shoulder his share of the nation-wide beauty contest to be held in connection with national release of "Gold Diggers of 1933." From the beauty chorus of 200 girls in the film 18 will be dangled before the public to choose one most fitted for stardom. Slogans will be: "Be a Beauty Contest Judge"; "Help Make Me a Star." A vast newspaper campaign is in preparation. . . .

ANDREW SASO, manager of Hamrick's Oriental Theatre, Portland, Ore., aroused considerable curiosity by placing a "42d Street" sign on Grand Avenue in his city when exploiting the current musical film. Lots of folk wanted to know if the City Council had given Saso permission to change the name of the street. . . .

JACK MARPOLE, chief of the Paramount Theatre, Salt Lake City, had all ushers rigged out in sailors' whites during the showing of "Sailor's Luck."

IRVING WATERSTREET, manager of the Victory, Salt Lake City, recently cashed in on a two-for-one tie-up with the local traction company, whereby car pass holders were entitled to bring a companion to the Victory for one admission. . . .

MICHAEL UALA, manager of the Eighth Street Playhouse, Greenwich Village, New York City, recently issued a program as distinctive as his house. Outside was done in silver against white and a folder insert of good grade bond announced dates for "Child of Manhattan." The spread of the folder carried photo of Nancy Carroll and reprint of a review from a daily. Very neat piece of work, say we. . . .

TED GAMBLE, well known manager of the Northwest, brought increased business by arranging for a personal appearance of Norma Talmadge and George Jessel at Parker's Broadway Theatre, following their engagement at the New Roxy, Seattle. . . .

ROBERT HICKS, manager of the Empire, San Antonio, Texas, found the Barthelmess memory stunt outlines in First National's merchandising campaign on the picture to his liking and tied the idea to his local newspaper. It found ready response from patrons, he reports. . . .

HARD TO GET!

You bet it's hard to get a window on Fifth Avenue, New York City, such as the one shown in the photo above, but Martha Wilchinsky, formerly of the Terry Turner office at Radio City, and the Disney office, succeeded in tying up the Southern Pacific Lines with current Mickey Mouse and Silly Symphony attractions, as well as Disney Motion Picture Academy awards. The display created lots of comment.

ED. M. FAY, operator of Fay's Theatre, Providence, R. I., and houses in several other cities, used a diversified collection of some 50 stills to play up production values of "42d Street." The frame had strip lights on top and bottom and a gold background. It made a most effective display and caused plenty of comment on the attraction. . . .

J. ELMER REDELLE, in charge of the Victory, Dayton, Ohio, took advantage of the topical timeliness of "Elmer the Great" through a newspaper stunt which requested readers to name an all-star or championship team of players who at one time or another had played with a Dayton club. Much local interest was aroused.

HOWARD WAUGH is always several jumps ahead of the parade when plugging trade for his Warner Theatre, Memphis, Tenn. Although the "Old Maestro" will not play "Gold Diggers" for several weeks he has already distributed hundreds of 5½ by 4½ telephone pads which carry advertising copy on the forthcoming film and admonition to watch for playdate. Catchline was: "'Watch for the date on Seventh Wonder of the Show World." . . .

CHARLES R. STOFLET, formerly of Ludington, Mich., and for the past year manager of the Margie Grand Theatre, Harlan, Ky., is one of this industry's latest gift's to the staff of Kentucky Colonels surrounding the colorful personality of Governor Ruby Laffoon. Salutes are again in order. . . .

GEORGE DELIS, manager of the Palace, Canton, plugged "King Kong" with a herald which carried "terror" copy and photo of three characters on one side and a jigsaw puzzle scheme on the reverse. Puzzle was purported to have been devised by Robert Armstrong for amusement of Fay Wray and Bruce Cabot while all were en route to Skull Island and consisted of a picture of Armstrong and his friends. Armstrong accused friends of hiding pieces. Patrons were invited to piece the puzzle together, exonerate friends, who refused to answer, and thereby earn a free show. 500 heralds carried complete puzzles. . . .

JACQUES SHELLMAN, former movie editor and theatre contact man for Baltimore Sunpapers, handled the exploitation for Morris A. Mechanic, proprietor of the New Theatre, Baltimore, on "Cavalcade" and did a corking job, we hear. Popular prices were stressed. With all Jacques' experience as a newspaperman he failed to supply this department with details of his campaign. Next time, maybe? . . .

FRANK BARNES, skipper of the Dickinson Theatre, Lawrence, Kansas, is gaining the good will of the University of Kansas students by admitting fraternity members free on designated nights. . . .

MIKE WESHNER, impresario of the Fabian Theatre, Hoboken, N. J., helped "42d Street" roll up a most satisfactory gross by sending out over his entire mailing list postal telegraph blanks blown up to 17 x 11. Copy reads "Hello, Everybody—Stars Galore and what a score has '42d Street'—Action—Drama—Fun—Suspense. A cast that's hard to beat—Warner Baxter—Bebe Daniels — Ginger Rogers, Too—Powell—Brent—Merkel—Keeler — Just to name a few—Take a tip, don't let it slip—When you see it billed—Of course, it's Warner's and you'll be thrilled," etc. And may we add that Mike's somewhat of a poet—whether you know it—or not. . . .

C. C. McDERMOND, in charge of the New Stadium Theatre, Salt Lake City, now nearing completion, is keeping his house in the limelight by sponsoring a baseball club made up of a combination of youngsters and veterans. . . .

NELSON HAMPTON, new chief of the New Strand Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., recently made a splendid food advertising tie-up with a local newspaper. Names of a large number of residents of the city placed in food store ads throughout the paper were redeemable in pairs of ducats for "Rain." The paper came through with a large announcement ad. . . .

STUDIO PREVIEW SHOWS!

New Idea for Theatres Offers Great Possibilities for Increasing Ticket Sales!

HERE is a slant that blew in from Ohio a short time ago, which excited our interest and will, we believe, have the same effect on other Club members.

The idea, briefly, is this: You contract your local independent exchange and buy, for one performance only, one of their pictures that have not been sold to the town. Play it as near to original availability as you can so that those who see it in your theatre will not be able to say that they had already seen it in some other town not too far away.

Following the Hollywood idea, the theatre must build up interest in their "Studio Preview" by giving it an advance campaign without undue emphasis. Merely a one-frame trailer advising your patrons to watch for "Preview" night when by special arrangement with a studio in Hollywood your theatre will give a preview of a newly completed feature.

Announcing the Preview!

On the day you are to present this picture we suggest that you announce it via your regular newspaper ads and special plugs elsewhere in the paper than your theatrical page. Place a large sign in front of the theatre, especially if you are on a busy transient street, reading: "TONIGHT—STUDIO PREVIEW."

In presenting the picture, spot it between your first and second night show. Original titles must be removed and in its place have your own trailer reading somewhat along these lines: "BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT WITH THE HOLLYWOOD STUDIOS THE PALACE THEATRE PRESENTS A NEWLY COMPLETED FEATURE WHICH HAS NOT BEEN TITLED AS YET." They go on to ask that all patrons will confer a favor on the studio and management if they will kindly fill out the forms handed out by the ushers and to leave them with theatre attendants on the way out.

Give It Atmosphere!

Surround the entire idea with as much Hollywood atmosphere as is possible along these lines and see how they go for this in a big way. The cards handed out by the ushers, as used in Ohio by Horton Kohn of the RKO Palace in Columbus, reads as follows:

FEATURE PREVIEW COMMENTS

Story .....
Cast .....
Title suggestion .....
Remarks .....
.....

Please give to any theatre attendant as you leave the theatre. Feature previews will be held at the Palace every week. Watch newspaper ads for announcements.

These cards measure three by five inches and are distributed to the patrons as they come in for the first evening show.

In spots where every foot of product has not been already bought due to double featuring or because of two or more theatres needing all available product, this idea can be built up to be a real novelty. It can hardly be labeled a double feature bill because the preview is held on but one night of your run and is given as a special added idea.

Although the major distributors may refuse to sell their product into towns not holding regular contracts, you will find that the independents will work with you. If the comment about one of these preview pictures is sufficiently good, you should book the picture in for a short run a few weeks later under its proper title and announce in your ads that this is the picture previewed on such-and-such a date.

Good word-of-mouth advertising will give it an excellent start to large grosses and altogether the idea possesses many worthwhile slants certainly worthy of serious consideration. Perhaps there is a slant or two in this that will start you working something out along your own lines. If you try out a Preview Night and can add some original idea of your own, go to it and let us in on the details. We will pass them along so that all may benefit by each other's experiences.

MILWAUKEE SMILED!

During the recent "Bank Holiday" the M.P.T.O. of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan took almost an entire page in the Sunday edition of a Milwaukee newspaper to boost theatre patronage.

Alongside a photo of a fellow with a regular Joe E. Brown smile ran the head: "Trade Your Long Face For A Smile". Following was a quotation from President Roosevelt's inaugural address: "The Only Thing We Have To Fear Is Fear Itself!" Other paragraphs pointed out that there was no better way to forget troubles and worries than by attending the theatre; that everyone in town was in the same boat; that "Smiles Are Best" medicine for the blues, etc. The entire M.P.T.O. local membership was listed. Prominent mention of the move was made in the paper's main editorial column.

Although no signature was attached to the tear sheet we have at hand, it's perfectly safe to credit this fine piece of box office propaganda to Fred S. Meyer, guiding spirit of the above-named organization.

Cummings Mailed a Letter

To stir up interest on "King's Vacation", Harold G. Cummings, manager of the Warner-Palace Theatre, Danbury, Conn., sent out a special, personal letter on a selected mailing list. Gist of the letter concerned the line-up at Radio City Music Hall when the picture played there and made a strong bid to Arliss fans to come to the theatre and enjoy seeing a favorite and accomplished star in one of his best vehicles. A postscript also got in a plug for a couple of forthcoming attractions.

DICK WRIGHT WAGED SPLENDID CAMPAIGN ON MUSICAL PICTURE

Among the raves received by the Club on box office potentialities of "42nd Street" is one from Dick Wright, manager of Warner's Strand Theatre, Akron, Ohio. He reports that in spite of the day and date banking crisis the film was held for a second week and did the best business since "All Quiet" was played back in '30. Maybe Dick's campaign had something to do with this. Let's see what he did:

Although the "42nd Street" Special stopped at Akron but 40 minutes a photo shows that Wright made the most of the occasion. Both papers carried news stories five days in advance advising Akronites that they could glimpse a bevy of movie stars and approximately 5,000 fans, newspapermen, photographers, the American Legion Post's band of 40 pieces and a flock of Postal boys with banners, turned out to meet the train.

The General Electric tie-up also proved an effective selling angle. Thirty canvassing salesmen employed by the company distributed 20,000 four-page tabloids (regular material) one week in advance in all residential sections and a fine window display in the G. E. salesrooms created further interest. A complete health-kitchen was assembled in the theatre lobby where one of the salesmen was in constant attendance.

Another tie-up (see photo) was made with a local merchant and netted a very attractive window of "42nd Street" fashions, cards and stills on the picture.

In addition to 500 brilliantly colored pennants the front of the theatre was decorated with large colored blow-ups, with a rotating beacon light atop the marquee to attract attention at night. Eight 28 x 42 colored enlargements of chorus girls were placed in individual frames and set along the sidewalk five days in advance, as well as a large display containing 40 stills. This display proved an excellent medium for making Akron movie fans "42nd Street" conscious.

A tie-up made with the classified department of one of the local newspapers netted 100 inches of gratis advertising display.

Dick states he was also fortunate in having on hand at the time loudspeakers with amplifiers mounted on marquee to pick up Inauguration Day ceremonies from the radio station. Voice range extended for two blocks in either direction.

Wright pays glowing tribute to the press book gotten out on this picture and suggests that fellow showmen follow it closely when planning their campaigns. This same hint was conveyed in a past issue of the Round Table Club section. Many thanks to Dick for his suggestions.

CAMERA DISCLOSES REASON WHY LOUIS ORLOVE IS POPULAR

The secret of Louis (Eagle) Orlove's success as a showman par excellence is at last brought to light!

No need to keep you all in suspense any longer. Step up close, fellow Round Tablers, and take a good look at the accompanying photo. This may be the reason why they all raise cain when any move is made to take the Eagle to another nest; that may be the secret of his success when promoting cooperative deals between merchant and theatre; that may be the reason why they all follow him around and smilingly give him the glad hand.

Incidentally, and getting away for the nonce from Orlove's mesmerizing methods of showmanship, let us comment on this particular tear sheet, which was taken from his neighborhood newspaper. It was an "extra" and carried the head: "Mitchell St. Men Declare War on Depression." The head of the main bank stated that the association demanded the immediate serving of beer.

What is of particular interest, however, is the style of make-up and its possibilities for the promotion of some similar idea in other neighborhoods and cities. The page carried from a dozen to 15 photos of neighborhood merchants, all wise-crackingly captioned and with brief statements of who was who and why. There may be the makings of a swell trade boosting stunt in this idea. If it appeals to any of our members, make a note of it and the next time you make the rounds among merchants and your newspaper friends, sound it out; and if it works out to your advantage, thank Orlove.

A Gold-Digging Pressbook!

Charlie Einfeld's department in the Warner home office, New York City, has again come through with a remarkably fine pressbook, to our way of thinking. This time it's "Gold Diggers of 1933," and when you have the opportunity to glance through the wealth of fine material it contains, take note of the numerous lobby accessories such as life-size standees; the giant lobby set piece; valance and burgees; streamer cutouts spelling the title; special 27x64 displays; striking roto art, and excellent publicity yarns. The exploitation and advertising sections are also particularly well done. Credit Ed Selzer and Stan Shuford for their share of the work.

FROM ALBERTSON'S SCRAPBOOK!

LET'S LOOK THROUGH ONE OF ALBERTSON'S HOOSIER SCRAP BOOKS

Having at hand a scrap book compiled by Jack Albertson when he was in charge of the Indiana Theatre, Indiana Harbor, Ind., we'll have to jot down a brief account of what he did at that time to boost business.

First let's call attention to the photo of the attractive display he used in the inner lobby on "Grand Hotel." Note the miniature hotel, hotel grounds, figures, etc. When the windows and street lamps were lighted the display showed to even better advantage. The other portion of the photo shows the excellent work he turned out for "Cabin in the Cotton," which included miniature country cabins, cotton stalks, cutouts and stills, A sign points out that certain of the cabins were built by an East Chicago Boy Scout in the Indiana Theatre Cabin Building Contest, which indicates that Jack had the boys working in his interests while exploiting the film.

Glancing through the book it becomes evident that he waged quite an extensive campaign on "Bring 'Em Back," including a circus bally with loudspeakers; huge banner across the main thoroughfare; jungle front; special newspaper advertising and special heralds.

Other pages disclose special heralds advertising "A Double Blast of Entertainment" on a Sunday and Monday; a "mystery Special" herald on "70,000 Witnesses"; special guest ticket herald on a show arranged for kiddies; a "word-hunt" among advertisements as a plug on "Down to Earth," etc.

Although some of the above suggestions may be making a somewhat belated appearance, we're sure Albertson's fellow Round Tablers will be interested. He has contributed much useful show-selling information in the past and just as soon as we again hear from him at his new location more will be forthcoming.

INGENUITY!

Jack Johannsen, manager of the Imperial Theatre, Augusta, Ga., made an eye-filling front display recently by creating a number of cut-outs. Atop his marquee he used cut-out block letters to advertise the picture. The entire stunt was done at very small cost.

THAMES' AD COPY IS AIMED DIRECT AT THE MOVIE FANS

It's a funny thing about newspaper advertising, especially that pertaining to motion picture attractions. If you were handling a theatre in the Big Towns, the agencies would look it over and label it, such as: "Intimate Advertising," "Sophisticated Advertising," and so on.

But the showman never even heard of these terms. He figures out the angle best suited to his personal selling problems. And that's why Jimmy Thames, Jr., handling advertising and publicity for Arkansas Amusement Corp., in Little Rock, Arkansas, turns out potent copy.

Here's how: Atop his usual ads, made up by cleverly cut mats and breezy copy, he writes an intimate head and copy aimed directly at the reader. An example (a mat cast of Washington chopping down the cherry tree; alongside the mat, a head): "We CANNOT TELL A LIE!—Our best friends have accused us of doing a lot of boasting here lately . . . but, dear people, why not? Maybe it's boasting . . . we call it the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth! We have THE pictures . . . we know it . . . and if you don't believe it read below and follow some good entertainment advice!"

That copy is the selling kind.

New England Changes!

The following changes in theatre personnel were recently announced by Harry Arthur, head of the Harry Arthur Circuit in New England: William Gleason is now managing the Capitol Theatre, Hartford, Conn., instead of the Palace, Waterbury; E. J. Fitzpatrick, formerly of the Palace, Meriden, has taken Gleason's old post at Waterbury; W. H. Thompson, former assistant at Waterbury, is now manager of the Palace, Meriden; Barney London, of the home office, is the new assistant at the Palace, Watertown.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 175.—(A) Why should port fire shutters be well padded at the bottom? (B) How many poles may a generator (dynamo) have? (C) Just what would be the difference between connecting a lamp directly across the poles of a generator and across one of your theatre circuits? (D) Why is it essential that projectionists have a good working knowledge of generators? (E) Describe a simple wet battery cell.

Answer to Question No. 168

Blue School Question No. 168 was: (A) Just why is it necessary that the motor rewinder motor be stopped immediately the rewinding is finished? (B) Explain the effects of using crooked reels in rewinding. (C) Give us your idea of a patching block, its location, lighting, etc. (D) Name the various advantages of slow rewinding, say at the rate of 1,000 ft. of film each six minutes.

The following made acceptable answers: T. Van Vaulkenburg, C. Rau and S. Evans, G. E. Doe, Dale Danielson, K. Dowling, W. Ostrum, J. Wentworth, B. Doe, H. Edwards, A. Altman and D. T. Holmes, G. G. Breston, J. S. Bischoff and L. S. Marksley B. Eilers and D. Holler, G. M. Marksley, M. Donahue, A. Bailey, P. Lambert and S. G. Goss, H. D. Davis, B. Diglah and O. Garling, M. R. Cass, M. H. Sanders and T. L. Shelton, C. D. and L. Dodson, P. Hadley and D. L. Solomon, W. D. Lalley, T. Gaitsley and B. R. Compton and L. N. Galley, D. B. Bates and J. L. Major, M. R. Winning and N. Daniels, G. Thompson and D. Lilley, P. N. Pundray, W. S. Andrus, A. Lomberg and D. Johnson, W. D. Adamson and L. Simmons, R. L. Henderson, B. Phillips, N. Gault, P. W. Edwards, F. O. Olliver, A. E. Wyatt, B. L. Buckley and L. T. Chotes, B. T. Daniels, M. L. Wright, T. L. Shelton, D. L. Bentley, P. L. Algy and R. Dinmat, J. Ahrenson and G. Lombard, W. A. Andres, H. D. Cylor, F. D. Samuels, B. M. May, L. I. Tirgley, B. E. Olliver, L. Peterson and D. Donahue, J. L. Richards and T. B. Cudmore, B. T. Sampson and G. C. Hendrie, J. S. Henderson, G. Ackerson and P. L. Talley, M. S. and T. O'Brien, H. B. Jenkins, D. N. Peters, T. Potter and H. Steele, R. Sanders, N. D. Salier, H. M. Evans, G. M. Johnson, L. Peterson, T. R. MacAllen and D. E. Ellis and M. Compton, P. L. Mangan and D. U. Tomms, H. D. Schofield, B. I. Summers and L. R. Toli, A. Lomberg and R. D. Grimes.

I have selected the answer of H. D. Davis as to section A. He says: "Rewinder motor should be stopped immediately rewinding is finished, preferably by an automatic stop since at the moment the projectionist may and in a one-man-room probably will be occupied elsewhere. Possible results of motor running after film is all rewound are: (1) End of film slaps around and may be damaged. End of film may catch on something, a part of the rewinder possibly, and be torn or crumpled up. (2) Current wasted by permitting motor to run needlessly. (3) Needless wear of motor bearings—slight perhaps, but nevertheless represents waste. (4) End of slapping film has been known to catch a small object on the rewind table and hurl it with considerable force. Broadly, however, the rewind motor should be stopped immediately rewinding is finished to avoid possibility of damage to film and waste of current."

(B) I believe we will listen to G. E. Doe on this one. He says: "The effect of using crooked reels for rewinding may be: (1) Edges of bent reel will strike edges of film, possibly with very real force, thus tending to not only weaken or even tear the film edges, but also the film may be bent over so far that the metal will strike and injure the sound track. It has been done. (2) Rewinding with crooked reels, if at high speed, is usually quite noisy as compared with rewinding with straight ones. (3) If the rewinder elements be out of line the effect of crooked reels may and probably will be to inflict much and serious damage to film. (4) It is unworkmanlike and wrong from any viewpoint to use crooked reels for rewinding, except under circumstances compelling their use."

(C) Messrs. Rau and Evans say: "A patching block should be located midway between the rewinder head and tail pieces. There should be one between both the power and hand rewinder, if both are used. The best way is to set an oblong of heavy ground glass into an opening cut in the top of the rewinder bench, in proper location, so that its upper surface is flush with the bench top or, if preferred, a little above it. Under it should be an incandescent globe of not too high candlepower. Of course, if a film splicer be used there is no necessity for such an arrangement."

(D) K. Dowling says: "(1) Unnecessary for projectionist to watch the process unless there is some trouble to look for. (2) Film in no danger of being scratched or otherwise abused. Even with elements out of line or crooked reels, the damage would be reduced to its lowest possible value. Plenty of tension may be applied, so that there will be neither slippage nor necessity for pulling down, and in so doing grind dust and dirt into the emulsion, and even possibly scratching the celluloid back, all of which means 'rain' in the screen image later on. (3) Slow rewinding is easier on both film and rewinding equipment, less noisy and in every way better. Also the process is easier on the projectionist's nerves—that is, if he has any left these strenuous days."

Dale Danielson has the following to say regarding (D): "My rewind speed being 9.14267 plus per M feet of film, I find the following advantages: Damage is reduced to a minimum; film rewinds more evenly; not so much 'pulling down'; your mind is relieved of the rewind and you can be at a position beside the projector. As this one is equipped with an automatic stop the only necessary thing to do is to start the reel and remove it at the end of the rewinding; with slow rewinding any damage done by rewinder elements being out of line or by the use of crooked reels will be lessened. I am absolutely satisfied with the speed. Could have it even slower."

There aren't enough good pictures to go 'round

The United Artists Theatre, Long Beach, California, one of the many successful theatres using Alexander Smith Carpet

If you could get first class pictures every day in the year, your worries would be over. People will put up with second class surroundings in order to see a first class picture. But they won't put up with second class surroundings to see ordinary program pictures. And that's what you have to show more often than you'd like to.

That is why theatres that are making money attach almost as much importance to interior furnishings as to their programs.

Alexander Smith long-wearing carpets —richly colored, luxurious looking, soft-under-foot—will go a long way towards adding to the attractiveness of your house. And, at present prices, the chances are they will cost you a good deal less than you are figuring on.

Why not have our representative call and show you just how little Alexander Smith Carpets do cost? Among his samples you will find patterns for every type of theatre and grades for every budget. Write W. & J. Sloane, 577 Fifth Avenue, New York, wholesale selling agents.

Observations

¶ The motion picture theatre today is deserving of a profession of management. We do not mean to imply, of course, that it hasn't, in general, competent supervision. We mean simply that it now commands the breadth of training and the depth of responsibility, the ethics and the pride of a profession. Still more specifically do we mean that it has outgrown the mere "showman" type of management and has come to require the kind of administration which combines portions of the knowledge and talents characterizing several other fields.

New professions are commonly built up in the same manner. Consider the profession of projection, as we think Mr. Richardson rightly calls it: Your projectionist once had merely to know how to thread a projector, how to screw the carbons closer together, and how to turn a crank. We need not go into what he needs to know today, for that is obvious. Suffice it to say that he has had to borrow heavily from mechanical and electrical engineering, from optics and from several others of the physical sciences in order to meet the demands of his job today. His responsibility is tremendous.

Consider a profession that is much older standing, one that socially compares with that of medicine and law—architecture. We need not cite the fact many a celebrated architect is more promoter than architect. As a profession, architecture technically embraces a great deal more than making a building look nice. Basically architecture involves many different kinds of engineering. The architect is also an economist. A draftsman. An organizer. And an artist. He need not be an absolute expert in every one of these crafts. He does need to know enough about each to co-ordinate them in the creation of a well designed building.

Time was, and not so long ago, when the motion picture theatre was a room with a projector or two on one end, a screen on the other, and some chairs in between. The difference today is sufficiently obvious not to require elaboration here, but let us at least cite some of the things that enter into the functions of modern motion picture theatre management.

The manager, be he working for the owner or be he himself the owner, has to be a merchant, an organizer and director of personnel, an advertising director, a business manager, a buyer, a building maintenance engineer, a technician, besides being that type of person rich in theatrical imagination which we call the "showman." Not that he needs to be an absolute expert in all these functions. But he has to know enough about each to co-ordinate them in the efficient, effective operation of a motion picture theatre.

¶ As a merchant, management today has to be quite a psychologist. It is those in immediate charge of the theatre who should build its programs, and the kind of entertainment selected has to be precisely adapted to the peculiarities of the community served by that theatre.

As superintendent of an organization, theatre management must be able to discern competence, give coherent instruction, and be capable of developing loyalty.

In the field of exploitation and advertising, management must be schooled in the rhetoric and grammar of sales expression, and it must know a great deal about the mechanics of printing and engraving and the relative values of media.

As business head of the theatre, management must know enough about the nature and accounting of costs, allocation of charges, insurance, power, depreciation, etc., to comprehend the financial condition of his property, and in what departments that condition could be bettered. This division of management is closely associated with the next function we shall cite—that of technics.

The manager and his assistants may quite properly defer for details to the members of the staff specializing in the various technologies involved. But they should certainly know what constitutes efficient operation, what may be the source of trouble, the relative costs of repair and replacement, and how a technical function may be made more effective and at what expense. They also should be well versed in the apparatus available in the market, and enough about this equipment to appreciate what value their installation might have for their particular theatre.

¶ Without going further into the diversified duties of motion picture theatre management today, perhaps we have demonstrated the truly professional character of this activity. It has been amply demonstrated at least to our own satisfaction. And our observations have been that the field of exhibition itself is ready to place management on a still higher plane. These times have stimulated that desire, and they are increasingly demanding it be realized. G. S.

THE COMMON SENSE OF MAINTENANCE

By JACK KNIGHT

The first of a series of practical instructive articles for those in charge of theatres, by one of the industry's leading theatre maintenance engineers

NO FINANCIAL, industrial and commercial upheaval so far reaching as that through which we have passed in the last three years could possibly fail to bring about shifts and changes in our business of exhibiting motion pictures of the most varied and far-reaching character. At this moment changed opinions, changed policies and changed methods are in work, directed toward a new type of theatre operation. The general industrial and financial world feels that this depression has struck bottom and is now on the rebound, thus ending an epoch in the affairs of world and of the hurted states this period of recovery will lead us into a new period of our business; we must plan it now because our business should very quickly reflect the upturn in general affairs.

We are here going to emphasize the maintenance of theatres in this article, this same maintenance which has been so sadly neglected during this period of dislocation.

THE NATURE OF MAINTENANCE

IN DISCUSSING maintenance in relation to motion picture theatres there are two very important points to clarify at the start. The first is that we all must be thinking of the same thing when we say maintenance. The second is that all discussions must be in the light of lessons learned and observations made during the last three adverse years.

Maintenance to be correct is the care given to equipment or buildings necessary to retain them in a condition of maximum utility, and in a condition compatible with hazardless operation.

In truth the maintenance account for any theatre has been the catch-all for any expenditures that were not wanted in other accounts. This tendency should be recognized and corrected.

The term maintenance as used herein will be considered in its correct sense, divorced from the functions of purchasing and the service of routine supplies to theatres, which in the past has been coupled with it.

Briefly, maintenance, in accordance with our definition, is a function rather than a separate department, and as a function it becomes, according to our recent experiences, properly one of theatre management. By this we mean that each of you theatre managers must realize that you are your own maintenance man, and properly so.

From this point of view we are preparing a series of articles on maintenance which should be helpful to the circuit operator, to the owner who manages his own theatre, and to the manager of the circuit house.

THE PAST IN MAINTENANCE

DURING THE last decade we all know how our industry has grown with all phases and features of the business over-emphasized, so the maintenance function was over-emphasized. Large circuits developed top-heavy maintenance organizations and presumably clothed the whole function in many technical phrases and equally burdensome methods and procedures, thereby leading many to believe that there must be some great mystery about the maintenance of theatres. This system failed to recognize that maintenance must be done in the theatre—it can't be done from behind a desk in a home office. This system also gradually removed the function of maintenance as a part of theatre management and tried to make something different out of it. This system also led the independent theatre operator to believe that the maintenance of his theatre required more than common sense and a knowledge of the business. He thought that this must be so because the large circuits were employing high-priced engineers with high-sounding titles, and were surrounding the whole procedure with much red tape, surveys and investigations. Those days, we hope, are gone forever.

With the development of large maintenance staffs, theatre managers were picked more and more with no thought in mind other than: Is he a showman? Can he sell or merchandise a picture? The result is that too few managers today are qualified to handle the maintenance problems arising in their theatres with any degree of economy or efficiency, because the necessity for such has not been demanded of them in the past.

The majority of managers today are entirely dependent upon the advice of a projectionist, a stage manager or the handy chief janitor. This condition is due for a rapid change because the successful theatre manager in the future is going to have sufficient knowledge to argue the whys and wherefors of the details of his maintenance requirements.

To this rather lengthy preface to our efforts towards building a greater conscientiousness of just what maintenance can mean to you when properly handled, we add that we feel that your theatre as your place of business should represent to all who visit it all the skill, artistry and culture of the product which you exhibit. As the show window for your industry and its product, and as your particular place of carrying on business, it must depict your personality, your good taste, your cleanliness, efficiency and your clever ability to attract, display and sell your shows in such a way that your patrons are pleased and have the desire to return.

CLASSIFICATION OF MAINTENANCE PROBLEMS

THERE IS AN outline of classifications. Into one or more of such classifications all your maintenance problems will fall. This arrangement is in the order of importance. Every effort within good business reason and judgment should be made to take care of those items which fall in the highest classifications. It may not be possible to take care of all your desires in connection with your theatre, but be governed by this table and do as much as you can after a careful consideration of your average box office figures. Don't over-stride.

Class 1.—Hazardous conditions
Class 2.—Projection and sound
Class 3.—Stage shows or presentations or spot acts where used.
Class 4.—Comfort of audience or parons.
Class 5.—Cleanliness of auditorium, rest room, in fact all spaces where your patrons are admitted.
Class 6.—Exterior signs, marquees, etc.
Class 7.—Physically deteriorated conditions of buildings or equipment that might lead to emergency conditions at some unexpected time.
Class 8.—Improvements such as redecorating, refurnishing or general rehabilitation.

In discussing each of these classifications in more or less detail we want to emphasize that in this respect our remarks must be of a general nature and may not meet with the exact conditions which confront you, but your study of this grouping is bound to aid you in planning your maintenance schedule, which you will undoubtedly undertake just as soon as your business conditions justify your action.

Generally we feel that the industry

"This system failed to recognize that maintenance must be done in the theatre—it can't be done from behind a desk in a home office. This system also gradually removed the function of maintenance as a part of theatre management. . . This condition is due for a rapid change."

should begin to make an effort in this direction now. This opinion is based upon our belief that we should have our properties in the best condition possible in order that we might take the fullest advantage of the slightest upturn in our business.

HAZARDOUS CONDITIONS

IN CLASS 1 is "Hazardous Conditions," and we feel that this is proper because the risk and the reaction on the whole industry when calamities happen which are traced to negligence or an improper appreciation of condition which jeopardize the life or limb of our patrons, are so far reaching that it is extremely unwise not to put the safety of our patrons first.

Of course we all have state and municipal laws and ordinances with which we must comply. The periodic inspection of state and city representatives should be accepted with the attitude that such inspections are your protection, not looked upon as times when you must cover up something. Too frequently managers attempt, and sometimes successfully, to "fix" temporarily such conditions. We wish to caution you that when that condition is discovered as the cause of a serious or possibly a fatal accident, you will be left with the entire responsibility for that condition. We fully appreciate the fact that there are existing and in use at the present time some very old theatres which would cost a king's ransom to recondition so that they would comply with the latest accepted standard of hazardless theatre. In such instances it behooves the managers and operators of such properties to be especially watchful of conditions which they can economically control or correct which might remove some of the hazard of such operations.

The same care and consideration should be exercised over more or less minor conditions, such as steppings, floor covering, too few aisle lights, damaged panic bolts, and the arrangement of furniture so as not to block free and easy exit in time of emergency. The correcting of such conditions will many times bring about savings in your insurance.

PROJECTION AND SOUND

CLASS 2, covers the maintenance of projection and sound. Much has been written and published on both of these subjects and the most that we can say here is to emphasize their importance. Your pictures are of course your stock in trade, but pictures without at least acceptable projection and sound are a hard commodity to sell. Most managers seem to be better qualified to understand this type of maintenance due to the efforts of leading manufacturers, and also due to the excellent columns carried in our trade journals. At this point we must also appreciate the fine work done by the projectionists themselves and the interest of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. There is really no excuse for any manager today not to be well posted as to just what good sound and good projection really are, and what each can do for him at the box office.

If asked for the fault which we think most outstanding in projection today, we should say, too small a picture, and too little light. With regard to sound we should say, too infrequent checking of forms to give proper coverage of the theatre, and a failure in many instances to establish and adjust the proper sound level.

STAGE SHOWS AND PRESENTATIONS

CLASS 3 is injected solely for those theatres using stage shows, vaudeville, stage bands, tabs or just spot acts. Such shows in conjunction with your picture become part of your "Bill of Goods," and as such must be considered as of equal importance with projection and sound. The most outstanding criticism from the maintenance point of view of such operations is insufficient light on the stage in order to get the desired effects. This, of course, is caused by lack of lighting equipment, or lack of current, or lack of dimmer capacity, or all of these factors. We have observed stage shows in small theatres, in neighborhoods or in small towns, that were truly a credit to the manager in spite of his handicaps along the line above mentioned. Either make such stage portion of your entertainment acceptable so that you can get the most out of your talent and thereby use such a show as a positive incentive for your screen entertainment, or, as some of us think, don't attempt it.

AUDIENCE COMFORT

COMFORT IS truly a sales argument today. It is true in everything from a doctor's office to a department store, of theatres, restaurants, transportation companies, automobile manufacturers and hotels. In fact, it is a universal and a very strong appeal, having some definite influence on too many lines of endeavor to attempt to mention here. We might define comfort as freedom from annoyances that distract attention.

Under this broad statement may be classified poor seats, poor seating arrangement, extraneous noises, improper lighting of auditorium, and too much traffic of theatre employees up and down aisles. Last but far from last in importance is heating, ventilating and air conditioning. We just mention this broad and important subject here, as it will be dealt with in more detail subsequently.

CLEANLINESS OF PUBLIC ROOMS

WITH REFERENCE to Class 5, cleanliness, like comfort, has become a very strong sales argument. One can hardly pick up a newspaper or magazine today and read the advertisements without finding the thought of cleanliness, or some degree of it, emphasized in about half of the ads. The detail involved in keeping a theatre clean is more intricate than nine-tenths of the theatre executives in this country appreciate. Apparently some feel that the cleaning of a theatre is about as simple as washing dishes, and in many cases judging from the attention given this function, some theatre managers seem to feel the same way about it. We hope to show you in future articles that not only is this function not as simple as all that, but that with some knowledge of the problem you will be able to save money

COULD RESEATING HELP YOUR THEATRE?

By LESLIE C. KINLEY

Appearance is but one factor. If you suffer from the climbing-over-patrons bugaboo, you might end it with loss of fewer chairs than you think

THE MOTION PICTURE theatre is predominantly a place for family entertainment, and its sole object should be to furnish a convenient, comfortable place in which to show motion pictures as perfectly as possible with modern projection and sound equipment. If the neighborhood house is to continue as a profitable business, it must recognize the ever increasing demands of the public for comfort, and if it is to continue attracting local patrons it must pay far more attention to their physical comfort than in the recent past. In order for a neighborhood theatre to be a profitable business it must be readily accessible and completely satisfactory to its customers, so that "going to the movies" becomes a habit and not an event.

In the past few years many major industries depending on the public for their income have taken steps to make their equipment more comfortable. Hotels, steamships, railroads and automobile manufacturers have all taken steps to replace or remodel old equipment, and have changed their entire schedules and policies in an effort to serve their customers, the public better. During the depression the motion picture theatre business has neglected this vitally important point. We all agree, I am sure, that three basic elements of the motion picture theatre are projection, sound and seating. I do not attempt to list these divisions in the order of their importance, for I feel that after all they are co-equal.

Using comfort as the basis of our discussion, it is readily seen how necessary to comfort it is to have all three of these integral parts perfect. If the projection and sound are good, and the seating arrangement poor, the latter condition detracts greatly from the value of the other two points. A good picture cannot be thoroughly enjoyed if one is physically uncomfortable. Much money has been spent in the last few years to improve projection and sound, but too little attention has been given to the problem of seating. This is true not only of old houses that have been remodeled, but to new ones as well. Only the minimum of thought and money has been spent on seating. After all a motion picture theatre is a place where people sit to enjoy themselves.

Practically all of the patron's time is spent in the chairs. Remember, they have come to your house to sit and watch and hear your picture. There should be nothing in the theatre to distract their attention from the screen. Comfortable seats, correctly arranged, assist them in relaxing, allowing them really to enjoy your show.

Now there really is no good reason why the theatre building cannot be built around the seats, thereby enabling one to secure the best possible seating arrangement and sight lines, instead of having to install the seats in such a way that their value is lost, by crowding in order to make them fit the house.

TRAFFIC FACTORS IN SEATING PLANS

WHEN ENTERING a theatre, many a patron wonders if he should sit on the end seat and be constantly annoyed by being climbed over by people wishing to get into the center seats, or if it is best to climb over someone himself and annoy that person when he enters and leaves.

This thought is really more serious than you might imagine, and I am sure you will find, on checking up, that many of your patrons would attend your house more regularly if it were not for this annoying inconvenience.

The motion picture theatre, unlike the legitimate theatre, is subjected to a constant traffic of people, and every care should be taken to have this traffic flow smoothly and with the least annoyance. If the screen theatre is to function so that it is always inviting to the public, its seating arrangement should be so designed that the patron can seat himself as quickly and easily as possible, and with no annoyance either to himself or to the other patrons.

One cannot possibly enjoy a picture, moreover, while seated in a cramped position on a hard uncomfortable squeaky chair. It is not difficult or expensive to remedy this condition, and in the following paragraphs I will try to give some ideas as to how a theatre that has seen some years of service can be made more comfortable and more attractive.

FIGURING EFFECT ON SEATING CAPACITY

WE WILL FIRST discuss the seating layout. The average old type theatre has the chairs spaced 30 inches back to back, and as you will see from Figure 1, this spacing allows only 6 inches of aisle room, and 10 inches of knee room. The knee room is the distance available for the patron's knees between the seat and the back of the chair in front. The knee room has been taken as the horizontal distance at a height of 19 inches from the floor, measured from the lower edge of the seat to the back of the chair in front of the occupant. The aisle room is taken as the unobstructed space between the seat (when down), and the top of the chair back in front. The aisle room is the horizontal distance from the top of the back to the front edge of the seat (when down). It will be noted that the knee room does exceed the aisle room in the two sketches. The aisle and knee room in Figure 1 is not sufficient for any real degree of comfort.

In the average thousand-seat house, new seats could be installed with a 20° pitch to the back, spaced 32 inches back-to-back, and show a loss in the number of chairs amounting only to approximately 10%, depending, of course, on the number of rows in the house. I am basing my figures on a 3-bank house, with a center section of 14 chairs to the row, and the two side banks with rows of 10. If your seats are now spaced 32 inches back-to-back, and you wish to reseat with chairs spaced 34 inches apart, the same percentage of loss in seating capacity would, of course, hold true, i.e., 8% of your present layout.

THREE TYPES OF THEATRE CHAIRS

AS FOR THE chairs themselves, they are listed in three groups. The veneer or plywood type, the upholstered inserted panel style, and the full-upholstered chair. Seats can be had of veneer, hair and cotton-stuffed, or in the box-spring and spring-edge type. If you are contemplating reseating, I would suggest that you select the spring seat chair with a full-upholstered back if possible, or a spring seat with an inserted panel back, for there is no doubt that these types are worth the additional cost when one considers the high standards of comfort exacted by the public today. You will find also that the upholstered chair improves the entire appearance of your house and also greatly improves the accoustical properties of your auditorium, especially when it is but sparsely attended. In short, it will also tend to put your old house on an equal footing with competing theatres of more ostentatious character.

In Figure 2 is shown the aisle and knee room of chairs spaced 34 inches back-to-back. You will note the aisle room with this spacing is 10 inches, and the knee room 14 inches. These distances allow for very comfortable seating and permit easy access and egress, thus eliminating to a large extent the faults mentioned earlier in this article. Of course a really "deluxe" seating arrangement is 36 inches back-to-back, which makes it possible for people to move freely in and out of their seats, and makes it unnecessary for them to rise in order to allow others to pass.

FACTORS APPLYING TO RESEATING PLANS

THE OBJECTIONS to increasing the back-to-back spacing is usually that even though the percentage of loss in seating capacity is small, this loss cannot be afforded. The answer is that the average thousand-seat house rarely has more than 800 people seated at a time, yet they are forced to suffer the annoyances and inconvenience of a capacity house! Certainly it would be more profitable to seat these 800 customers in really comfortable chairs, so they could enjoy the performance—and so they would be more inclined to return to your house with greater regularity.

Measured by the number of people you really seat at one time, the loss in chairs by making the entire seating arrangement better is not as great as it would appear to be at first glance. (See accompanying charts.) If deluxe houses in large cities, where space is tremendously valuable, can afford to lower their seating capacity to give their patrons added seating comfort, then it certainly would be a profitable action for the neighborhood and small town theatre to take.

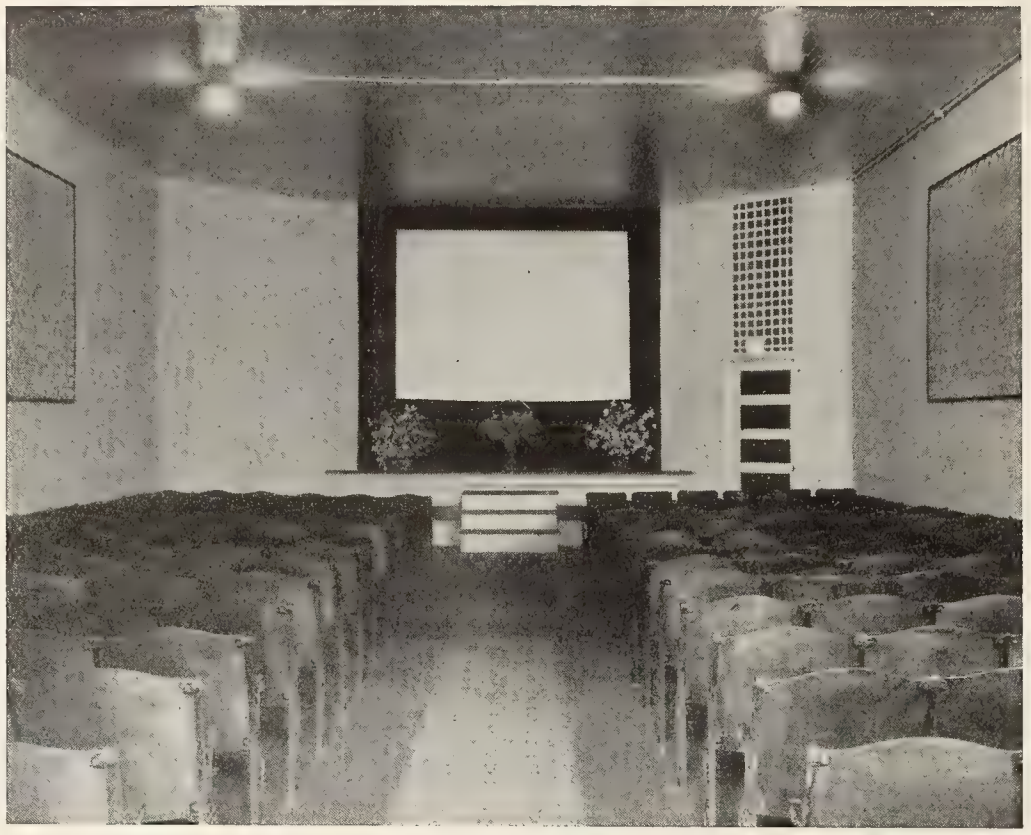
While increasing back-to-back spacing will cut down the seating capacity, it would be possible, if your house is now arranged in a straight layout, to reduce the loss of seats by arranging the new chairs in a curved or radius layout. This latter arrangement presents a more pleasing form for chairs, and allows a greater assortment of seat sizes. Further, with this arrangement each chair is pointed or faced directly at the screen, which factor helps improve the sight lines of your house. The curved layout increases the seating capacity over a straight layout, for the curved seat line measures a longer distance between two given points than a straight line between the same points.

I believe that too much stress cannot be put on the real box office value of good comfortable seating, properly arranged, and there is no doubt in my mind that the skillful reseating would increase the average gross of those theatres in which present seating is not inviting, not adapted to good vision, and not comfortable.

To summarize, comfort, attractiveness and an arrangement that provides good vision and eliminates annoyance, are basic in the seating of any motion picture theatre. These points have always commanded real consideration, and they do so especially today because so many theatres have been allowed to become rundown. Check your seats as to physical condition, try them for comfort, sit in them at different parts of the house with special respect to vision, question your patrons as to their comfort, ask them if they are able to relax completely, and observe traffic conditions to find out if your patrons notice difficulty in getting to seats or if they are annoyed when others attempt to do so.

After such a survey has been made and it has indicated the immediate desirability of reseating, work out by yourself or with the help of a suitable engineer, a plan by which you can obtain as many improvements as possible in addition to that represented merely by newness of appearance. Without loss of more than a few seats, perhaps without any loss in capacity, you may find your auditorium adapted to a plan which will give you a greater number of wider chairs, chairs so placed that vision (particularly in the forward part of the house) is greatly improved, and spacing that finally gets rid of the confusion, annoyance and resentment caused when patrons can barely squeeze past others in reaching inner chairs.

Safe Removal of Candy and Gum



● Inquiries have come in of late regarding methods for removal of candy and gum from carpets and upholstering, stimulated doubtless by the approach of the summer season, when the patronage of children is more regular than during the school term. To remove candy and gum carelessly is, of course, to invite permanent injury to the fabric or nap. Employees should be especially cautioned about this, since it is usually more convenient merely to rub off the candy with a dusting cloth, or to pull the wad of gum loose. Candy is easily removed with water. It is preferable to have the water hot because then the sugary substance immediately dissolves and may be taken up by only a light application of a soft cloth or, better, a sponge. Gum is more tenacious. However, the average theatre usually has some type of cleaning fluid handy (or one may purchase for a few cents a small quantity of chloroform or ether at the nearest drug store), and application of this to the area involved in sufficient quantity to loosen the gum makes it possible to remove it without exerting any pull on the fabric or carpeting.

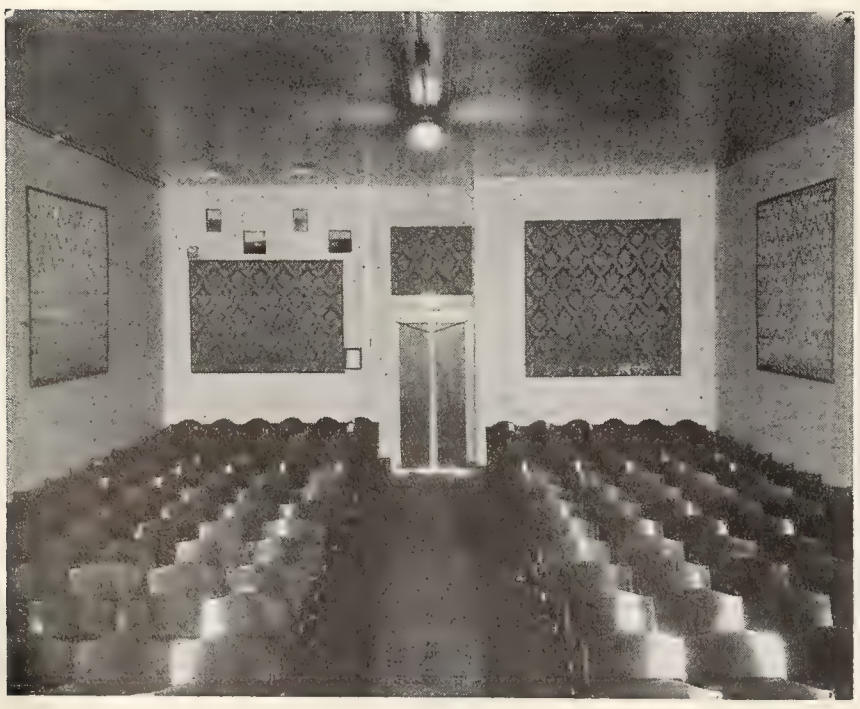
WHAT MR. JEFFERIS GOT FOR HIS $5,000

[We asked Mr. A. B. Jefferis of Piedmont, a substantial little Missouri town of 1,000 to send information on his new theatre there, following advice received from another source. We expected to have his information re-written into the usual descriptive and technical article indicated for a new theatre. Into his letter, however, Mr. Jefferis gets something —a sense of natural pride, perhaps, in his enterprise and ingenuity—that our rewriting would have to leave out. We therefore think that Mr. Jefferis tells about his theatre better in his own words. —The Editor.]

WE ARE rather proud of our efforts, inasmuch as we have a really pretty theatre, located in the business section of Piedmont, Mo., a town of 1,000 population. Mrs. Jefferis and myself had come to Piedmont from St. Louis with the idea of purchasing the theatre already here but closed. We found the house to be a fire-trap, however, but liking the town and seeing possibilities in this vicinity for an up-to-date small picture house, we leased a brick building formerly used as an office for the local power company. This building we could remodel as we saw fit for our theatre.

In planning this theatre, Mrs. Jefferis and myself had to be very careful in regard to finances, as our capital was limited. We did a great amount of work ourselves, including conduit wiring, electrical installation (which includes a dimmer for auditorium lighting), installing of panels on walls, installing projectors and equipment (thanks to Richardson's Bluebooks), and all the other work that we could possibly do. The entire job was done at a cost of $5,000, including the purchase of equipment with which to completely outfit the theatre.

Our building is of brick, is 24 feet wide, and 70 feet long. The interior is 13 feet high. We did not slope the floor, for our projection throw is 58 feet, and we were also able to place the screen high enough to permit a good view from any seat in the house. We have a capacity of 222.



The front of the building we left pretty much as it was. There are two large plate glass windows, and these we use in two ways: In the north window we placed poster frames. The south window permits passers-by to see the small lounge. This lounge, which is located just inside a second set of entrance doors, is papered with "Craftex" and is furnished with wicker chairs, sofa and table, a mirror and pictures. We make it a point to have an abundance of flowers in the lounge.

Just to the right of the first entrance doors, off a vestibule, we have the box office and a theatre office, which is directly under the projection room. Entrance to the auditorium is through the lounge, and we advertise, "Meet your friends in the lounge."

Seating is in two banks, with a wide center aisle. Partitions are of fireproof board, papered with "Craftex." On each side wall of the auditorium are two panels, each 100 x 72 inches. On the rear wall are two panels of the same size, and in addition, one panel measuring 50 x 72 inches, which is laid with felt for sound absorption and covered with rust damask for sake of appearance.

The three views of the Piedmont theatre show the auditorium, front and rear, and the lounge, which serves as a kind of lobby or foyer giving access to the auditorium.

USE OF THE FULL SCREEN AREA TODAY

By BEN SCHLANGER

Further studies by a theatre architect into relationship of studio technique and motion picture theatre design

THE MOTION PICTURE patron is peculiar inasmuch as he will tolerate, at least to some extent, many discomforts in the motion picture theatre. The acoustics may be poor, the condition of the air may not be very pleasant, annoying light reflections may bother him, and he may even have to distort the position of his body to see the screen, to the extent of suffering actual pain. Yet, despite all these disturbances and discomforts, he can quite enjoy the show!

However, he will complain, and complain loudly, when an important part of the picture is either obstructed by the head in front of him, or is not even within his range of vision. In the past such complaints have not been publicly voiced to any very great extent, but definite evidence, described herein later, discloses sufficient reason for expecting this consideration of screen vision to be a major problem to be dealt with in the exhibition of the motion picture.

This problem concerns itself first with the cinematographic technique of the motion picture, or more specifically, in relation to this article, with the distribution of the important action of the picture over the entire screen area.

Before any definite conclusions can be reached, it is necessary that a full appreciation be had of the tendencies of this phase of the art of cinematography—as practiced in the past, in the present, and as may be practiced in the near future. To accomplish this we must investigate a large number of motion picture productions, of varied types, made at different times, to determine if any portions of the screen area which the spectator cannot see properly, or even at all, are being used for the placement of important action.

PURPOSE OF ACTION AREA STUDIES

IN A PREVIOUS article dealing with this problem, some 20 current films, of which 120 scenes were used, formed a basis for a preliminary analysis. The 120 scenes of these films were not selected with regard to any particular type of films nor were they selected for any particular merit. It was merely a random selection from current runs. The analysis obtained was informative in a general degree, but the subjects could have been more representative of the better productions, both American and European, made over a longer span of time. Since the information being sought in these studies of the extent of screen area use, should be a guide to aid in the design of more or less permanent structures for exhibiting the motion picture, it is necessary that there be shown a consistent and beneficial use of certain portions of the screen area in motion picture productions over a fairly reasonable period of time. Also, it is necessary that each of the productions used for the analysis should have enjoyed some measure of success as a motion picture, the assumption being that theatres should be built to provide for the good productions, and thus, the poorer productions, would be rather well taken care of automatically.

An example of a good horizontal and low spread of action on the screen area. There is considerably important detail at the extreme bottom edge which, while perhaps it may not have been vital in the action, probably contributed much pictorial interest. See text.

Although the material pertaining to the extent of screen area use, as gathered to date, definitely points to the fact that the motion picture is very inadequately housed in present theatre structures, yet the demand for better theatres might be greater if the present signs of advancement in the art of cinematography, such as greater use of the entire screen area were made more obvious to the exhibitor.

ACTION SPREADING TO OUTER AREAS

IN ALL THE studies made of the motion picture by the author to date, it has been found that generally the important action on the screen has not shifted from one part of the screen to a distinctly different part because of any particular fad or any trick photography used in any given period. Rather, it has been found that the bulk of the action has consistently remained at about the dead center of the screen. The very recent studies, however, show that the better productions have been and are spreading the action more and more to the outer edges of the screen, towards a more uniform use of the entire screen area. This has been especially evident in some of the most recent productions, both American and European, and certainly points to a better appreciation of the value of the pictorial resources of the motion picture, which are basic to it.

It is therefore evident that when motion picture structures are erected and remodeled, they must be designed to accommodate the advanced cinematography not only of today, but also must accommodate the definite progress in this art which is, it seems to me, forthcoming in the next few years. Yet present motion picture theatres, including some of those erected quite recently, can barely accommodate a screen upon which would be shown the poorer products of cinematography.

The safe way to design a motion picture theatre would be to assume that every square inch of the screen surface is valuable for the purpose of the effective depicting of the story. It should also be assumed that the very top and bottom, and the extreme side portions of the screen, are not only as valuable, but are even more valuable than the dead center portion of the screen for pictorial interest. The diagrams illustrating the screen area used, which accompany this article, have been developed from 238 scenes selected from 30 productions, and definitely reveal that the use of these outer portions of the screen area are highly important to action portrayal.

It should be noted that the actual scenes used were represented for the most part by stills. However, only those stills were selected which indicated the scene in the film either exactly or very closely, comparison being made to film clips and exhibition on the screen.

TYPES OF PICTURES STUDIED

IN ORDER to make these studies representative, various types of films, both American and European, such as dramas, comedies, musical comedies, historical, spectacular, etc., were used. The following is a list of the names of the productions actually represented in the studies made for this article.

Two examples of the use of the upper portions and a good part of the width of the screen.

AMERICAN
Frankenstein
King Kong
Sign of the Cross
Cavalcade
Hell's Angels
Murder in the Zoo
Strange Interlude
Grand Hotel
Animal Kingdom
A Bedtime Story
Zoo in Budapest
42nd Street
Kid From Spain
I Am a Fugitive
Little Caesar
Big House
Kiss Before the Mirror
Story of Temple Drake

GERMAN
Maedchen in Uniform
"M" Metropolis
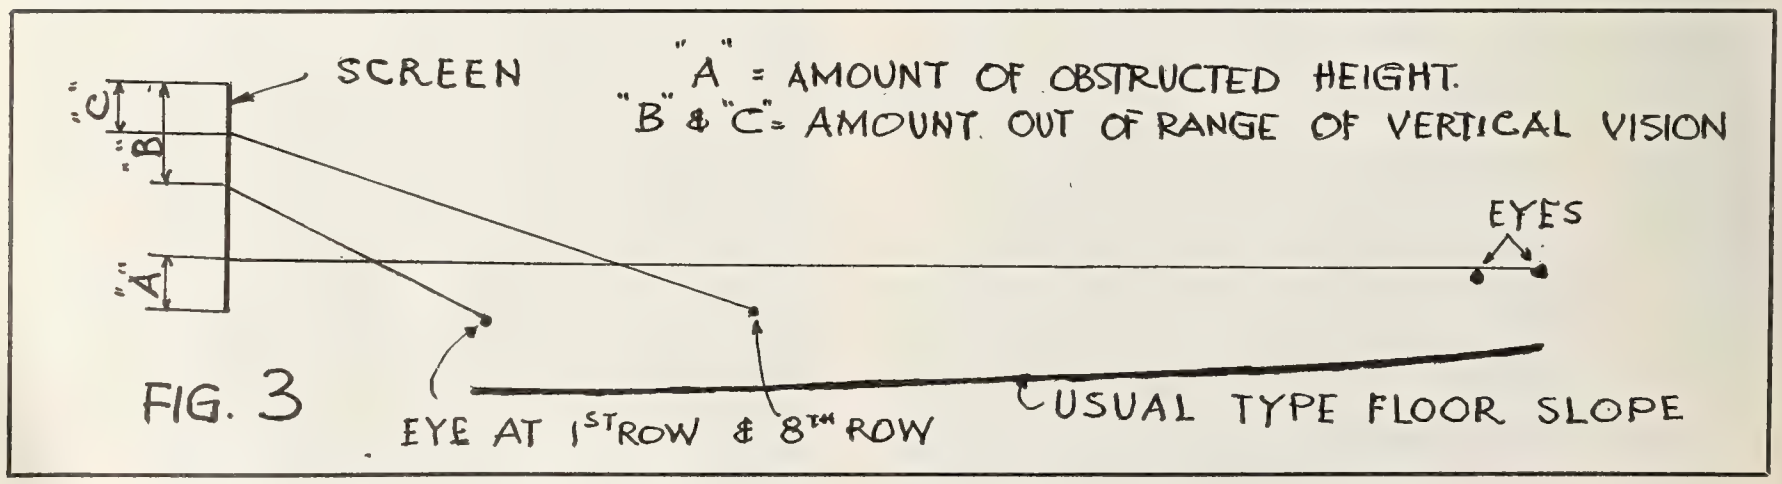
Kameradshaft
Queen Louise
Variety
Morgenrot
Three Loves
Sein Liebeslied

RUSSIAN
Potemkin
Ten Days That Shook the World
Soil

It is interesting to note that the spectacular, musical comedy and historical films have always shown a decidedly greater screen area use, while it is only quite recently that the drama productions are using a greater area of the screen for action portrayal than they had previously. The photographs accompanying this article show only a few instances where the extreme outer edges of the screen area are used advantageously.



EXPLANATION OF CHARTS

FIGURES 1 and 2 show to what extent the various portions of the screen are used for location of action in the above named pictures. Figure 1 is a composite diagram recording the areas of action portrayal of 30 American and European films. Figure 2 records only the European films, using twelve productions in all, and shows that European productions spread the action to the outer edges more than do the American. It is frequently stated that European films manifest great sensitiveness to the dramatic powers of cinematography.

In both Figures 1 and 2 the totally black area is the area which represents a 77% use; the area marked "A" represents a 44% use; the area marked "B" represents a 19% use; and the area marked "C" a 5% use. These percentages are based on the number of times any given area is used in relation to the number of times such an area could be used if the action took place on it once for every picture employed in the study. For example, a 100% use of the entire screen area would mean that for every picture recorded the entire area of the screen would be utilized with important action portrayal. Such an extreme, is, of course, actually impossible and unnecessary.

The ultimate benefits of good cinematography could be achieved if all portions of the screen received at least a fairly similar amount of the total action. Although known practices do not show quite such a balanced use of the screen, yet it is not difficult to imagine such an achievement in the near future.

Despite the fact that the extreme outer edges of the screen to date show a 5% to 44% use, as against a 77% use in about the central portion, it is nevertheless vastly important that the A, B and C areas should come within the range of unobstructed and normal vision of the spectator. The depicting of action occurring in these areas is highly essential and vital to the full effect of the motion picture. These important outer edges of the screen are either out of the normal range of vision, or else completely obstructed by preceding heads in the legitimate stage-type theatre structures. (See Figure 3.)

Three examples of important action placed extremely low on the screen area. To obstruct the view of such important details as the mouth in the middle scene, the animals and the lower portion of the man in the right scene, and the face in the left scene, would defeat the whole purpose of these pictures. See text.

Now with respect to this condition may I not bring forth again the point stated in my previous article in BETTER THEATRES on this subject:

There is much that the studio can do to improve the pictorial effectiveness of the motion picture by revaluing the areas of the screen, but in the theatre much would have to be done, since proper vision conditions are lacking in most theatres, at least in the larger ones, today. Following the current studies, as after the previous ones, I am convinced that if "the relationship between the problems of exhibition and production is not adjusted now or in the very near future, it is quite evident that such neglect will be one of the greatest stumbling blocks in slackening the development of the motion picture into the great art it could be. The combination alone of a very good story and very good acting in a motion picture has little advantage over the legitimate performance, with the exception, of course, of close-up shots and the fact that it can be seen in many places at the same time. It is the particular screen technique, especially as applied to backgrounds in the motion picture, that distinguishes it as an art apart from the art of the legitimate theatre. It is the contention of this writer that the present predominant use of a very limited area of the entire screen for depicting main focal action to a great extent stifles the possibility of obtaining more effective screen technique and backgrounds and, until this is changed, the motion picture is truly merely in a sense imitating the legitimate performance. The advantage of the motion picture over the legitimate theatre lies in the addition of this screen background and technique to the previously assumed good acting and good story content."

VISION IN THE THEATRE

VISION OF THE bottom area of the screen (about one-fourth the height of the screen) is usually obstructed by the preceding heads of the people in from one to five rows ahead of each spectator, varying according to the rate of pitch of the floor. This bottom area of the screen could be made visible if the screen were raised; but the screen cannot be raised in stage-type theatre structures without adding to the already poor quality of the front orchestra seats. The common practice in designing theatre floor slopes carried over from the legitimate theatre never provided for vision of anything below knee height, or much above the head of a personal performer. As a result, it is almost impossible to view the highest and lowest portions of a screen in theatre structures designed according to stage theatre principles. The bottom portion of the screen also presents a distorted view of the action placed there to spectators seated in steep balconies, which are also an unnecessary evil of the motion picture theatre.

The top area of the screen (about one-quarter the height of the screen) is out of range of normal vertical vision from the first ten rows of orchestra seats in the legitimate stage type of theatre structure. This area of the screen proves to hold a very important amount of action portrayal.

The side portions of the screen area (about one-quarter of the screen width at either side of the screen) affords only a distorted view of action placed there from side seats in the stage type of theatre (usually too wide near the screen). Using the complete width of the screen from one extreme edge to another (horizontal sweep) is highly essential to the motion picture. The film, "Grand Hotel," recently made, shows fine use of such action portrayal.

Two examples of action placed to the extreme sides of screen area. Note the hand at extreme right of the upper picture. See text.

To summarize, the motion picture screen is being ineffectively used. It is not portraying the full force of which the motion picture is capable. The reason for this is two-fold, and traceable to both the production and reproduction phases of the art. Firstly, an appreciable area of the screen is being ineffectively used and even wasted by present practices of placing the main focal action or interest only within a limited portion of the screen. Secondly, theatre auditoriums are unsuitably built to accommodate proper vision of a more advantageously used screen. To be able to utilize the entire area of the screen in an unlimited manner can add almost as much, if not as much, to the motion picture as did sound. Such effective use of the screen is not entirely unknown or unappreciated; nor is it entirely without precedence, as is shown in a few recent good films made both in Europe and in this country. Unfortunately, however, this screen technique is not sufficiently widespread.

Although it may be assumed to be more likely that the methods of production would affect the methods of reproduction rather than vice versa, it is of no consequence to find out which element will set the pace. Rather, it is important that both the problems of production and reproduction be considered at one time as they might affect one another.

The story and the acting in any one picture are purely problems of production. But, on the other hand, presentation is equally an exhibition as well as a production problem. The screen, as the final medium of presentation, definitely enters into the scope of both production and exhibition, and it is the screen which should be the problem of producer and exhibitor.

Does the motion picture director and cinematographer inquire as to how their productions can be, and are, finally viewed? Possibly they give that matter little or no thought at all. Cinematography, however, continues to improve. The question is, How much of it is lost merely through poor exhibition?

THEATRE LAW IN NEW COURT RULINGS

By LEO T. PARKER

Narrating and explaining late cases involving points of law of special interest to theatre owners and managers

IN THE ABSENCE of fraud or mistake parol evidence is not admissible to contradict, vary, add to, or subtract from the terms of a valid written instrument. There are numerous exceptions to this rule, however, most of which pertain to informal writings, incomplete memoranda, unilateral documents, and other writings that do not purport to set forth the entire contract.

Oral Promises Do Not Vary Written Contract

However, in cases involving complete contracts signed by the parties thereto and purporting to contain all their promises, representations, and undertakings, the rule is strictly applied.

Case:

For instance, in Fox Film Corporation v. Ogden Theatre Company (17 P. [2D] 294), a film distributor entered into a contract with a motion picture theatre operator to supply news films. The contract between the parties did not specify whether or not the news films should be latest issues, but provided: "This contract is complete and no promises or representations have been made by either party to the other except as herein set forth."

Legal controversy developed when the theatre operator complained that the news films being supplied were not the latest. The distributor sued to compel the theatre operator to accept and pay for the contracted films. During the trial the theatre operator attempted to introduce testimony that the distributor's salesman represented that the news films would be the latest issues and would be sent by airplane.

Decision:

Although the lower court held the theatre operator not liable on the contract, the higher court reversed the decision, saying:

"Direct oral evidence as to representations in the nature of warranties or as to statements that are in effect stipulations may not be received. . . . We are of the opinion that the trial court erred in admitting oral testimony to the effect that the salesman represented or agreed that the news should be the latest issues, and 'just out of the can,' and that it would be sent by airplane, and other statements and representations to the same effect."

INJUNCTION AUTHORIZED AGAINST UNION

REASONABLE DEMANDS of theatre employes may sometimes be fair and sometimes unfair. Combinations give the workmen a power of compulsion which may work harm to their employer, the public and even to themselves. Where the employes do not combine they may be compelled by force of economic circumstances to accept unfair terms of employment.

Therefore, various courts have held that the right of union employes to declare peacefully and truthfully to the world that the business practices of rival employes are unjust, and that theatres which patronized that union ought not to be patronized by the public, cannot be prevented. However, where any untruthful statement is made by such employes, the court will grant an injunction against such practice.

Case:

For example, in J. H. & S. Theatres v. Fay (183 N. E. 509), it was disclosed that a theatre owner employed members of a certain union, but later began employing members of another union. Members of the former union began picketing the theatre in a peaceful manner, but distributed circulars in the neighborhood which contained untruthful statements.

Decision:

In granting an injunction in favor of the theatre owner, prohibiting these latter acts, the court said:

"A broad injunction against all picketing has been sustained where there was a finding that picketing had been conducted unlawfully because accompanied with violence or misrepresentation. . . . Here the picketing was orderly and peaceful and not accompanied by misrepresentation. The wrongful acts found by the trial judge were not committed by picketers or at the place where the picketing was being carried on. Nothing in the evidence could lead to an inference that, if picketing is continued, it will change its character and become unlawful. The injunction must be limited to prohibition of specific unlawful acts except in so far as a broader prohibition has for its legitimate end protection against such acts. . . . The plaintiff (theatre owner) has been greatly wronged by the statements made by defendant's (union's) canvassers, and by circulars distributed in the neighborhood, and by public meetings at which the speakers reiterated such statements. All of this tended both to mislead and to intimidate the public on whose patronage the plaintiff must rely in its business. . . . Its injunction against the defendant, acting through agents or allies, should be broad enough to afford protection which is as complete as possible against the wrongs committed or concerted by the defendant (union). . . . So long as they confined themselves to honest truthful persuasion, the plaintiff had no right to complain, but the evidence shows that they misrepresented the situation and attempted to destroy the plaintiff's business."

WHEN CONTRACTOR FULFILLS CONTRACT

IT IS ESTABLISHED that a contractor is liable in damages if he fails to fulfill the terms of a theatre construction contract. However, if the contractor substantially completes a theatre building in accordance with plans and specifications he is entitled to recover payment, although the completed structure does not conform with the ideas of the architect and owner.

Case:

For illustration, in the late case of Hansen v. Covell (8 P. [2d] 856), it was disclosed that a contractor completed a building in accordance with plans and specifications, but the architect refused to furnish a certificate of completion on the contention that the contract was not fully completed. Nevertheless, since it was proved that the contract was substantially performed, the court held the contractor entitled to recover payment for the work.

Decision:

"If the builder, acting in good faith and intending and attempting to perform his contract, does so, he may recover the contract price, notwithstanding slight and trivial defects or deviations in performance, for which compensation may be made, in all its material and substantial particulars, by an allowance to the owner, but the owner is entitled to an allowance for the damages he may suffer by reason of the failure to perform strictly, such as the cost or expense of putting the structure or work in the condition called for by the contract."

What "Performance" Is:

The above rule of the law is applicable only where it is shown that the contractor substantially performed the work in accordance with the plans and specifications. Obviously, if the contractor breaches a theatre construction contract he is not entitled to recover any payment for the work done, and may be required to pay heavy damages to the owner.

Various courts have held that there is a substantial performance (1) where a variance from the specifications is inadvertent or unintentional and unimportant, and is one by which the building or structure as a whole is not impaired; or (2) where the building or structure is actually used after it is erected for its intended purpose; or (3) where the defects can be remedied by the owner without any great expenditure, and without material damage to other parts of the structure, and may without injustice be compensated for by deductions from the contract price; or (4) where it is apparent that the builder endeavored in good faith to fulfill his contract and practically did so.

DUTY OF THEATRE OWNER TO REPAIR

THE OWNER of a theatre building usually is bound to exercise ordinary care to discover and remedy any and all apparent defects. However, the owner of the building is not liable for injuries sustained by a patron of the theatre, where it is shown that the injury resulted from defective premises of which the owner could not have been aware by the application of ordinary care.

Case:

For instance, in Jackson v. Public Company (163 Atl. 504), it was disclosed that a shutter was insecurely positioned by a tenant, and a patron of the place of amusement was injured when the shutter fell upon him.

The injured person filed suit contending that the owner of the property was liable because the injury was a direct result of a defective cord on the shutter.

Decision:

However, since it was shown that the owner of the building was not informed that the cord had broken, and that the tenant had improperly repaired it, the lower court held the owner of the building not liable and the higher court sustained this verdict, saying:

"The defect in the premises was an incident to usual wear, common to every household. Its repair plainly devolved upon the tenant. Moreover, the defect would never have caused the trouble which ensued. The sole result of the defect would be that the shutter would not stay up when raised. It was the active intervention of the tenant that caused the damage."

OWNER'S LIABILITY IN INJURY ON ICY WALK

CONSIDERABLE discussion has arisen from time to time with regard to the liability of a theatre owner for an injury sustained by a pedestrian as a result of slipping on defective sidewalks abutting the theatre building. Recently the higher court in the case of McCarthy v. Adams (182 N. E. 324) rendered an important decision involving this point of the law.

Case:

The facts of this case are that a pedestrian voluntarily walked upon a sidewalk which was known by him to be defective. He sustained sever injuries as a result of a fall and filed suit against the property owner to recover damages.

Decision:

The higher court refused to hold the property owner liable, and stated the following important law:

"An owner who fails to remove ice from a sidewalk extending along his premises, where same was formed thereon by natural causes and without any act or fault on his part, or fails to make said sidewalk safe by covering the same with sand or some other suitable substance, is not liable in damages to one who sustains injuries by falling upon such icy sidewalk, even though a city ordinance required such owner to remove the ice from such sidewalk or cover the same with sand, and provided a penalty for failure so to do."

WHAT IS NEGLIGENCE?

A THEATRE operator may be held liable in damages for an injury sustained either by patrons or employes where the injury results from negligence on the part of the theatre operator. Therefore, it is important to know that in the late case of Pittan v. City of Riverside (16 P. [2d] 768), the higher court defined the term "negligence" as follows:

"Negligence is the doing of some act which a reasonably prudent man would not do, or the omission to do something which

BE SURE DISPLAYS ARE LEGAL

By M. MARVIN BERGER
MEMBER NEW YORK BAR

IT IS SURPRISING to find how many theatre managers think that the only limits upon lobby and marquee advertising are their advertising budgets and imaginations.

Take for example the case of the bright young manager of a Midwestern theatre, who, having decided to "pack them in" with a jungle feature, proceeded to make his theatre front a lifelike representation of African landscape. He filled the front with imitation cocoanut trees, and festooned the marquee with long, overhanging palm leaves. The marquee was further adorned by life-size figures of lions, tigers, elephants, etc. And no sooner was the whole display in place than the local building department ordered it to be removed, thereby forcing upon the bright young manager the realization of the existence of advertising regulations!

While legislation affecting construction and maintenance of billboards, signs and other structures or devices for advertising purposes has for the most part been enacted only during the past ten years, popular demand by 1931 had forced the adoption in thirty-three states of statutes dealing with the subject. In addition, similar ordinances have been enacted in hundreds of cities and towns.

In the making of these regulatory statutes and ordinances, it is recognized that a man may use his property as he sees fit, but the courts hold that in the interests of public safety, morals and general welfare, a city (1) may prescribe the material and manner of construction of advertising structures, (2) may restrict or limit their size, length, height and location, (3) may require them to be kept in a secure and sanitary condition, (4) may provide for their removal at the owner's expense if they become dangerous or unsanitary, and (5) may prohibit them from displaying indecent advertisements. And in the words of a leading case, "the fact that no injury has occurred by reason of the erection of the structure in question, or that it is improbable that any such injury will occur therefrom is not controlling."

The only restrictions upon such regulations are that they must be reasonable and must not discriminate. For example, purely aesthetic considerations alone will not justify the city or town in limiting the use to be made by a person of his property.

Since the maintenance of a forbidden advertising structure may result in an order for its removal and perhaps a fine, it is the duty of a wide-awake manager to know what forms of advertising the local regulations prohibit.

Such knowledge will not only prevent him from making useless advertising expenditures, but may head off actions by persons injured by dangerous structures or materials.

In cases where doubt exists as to the legality of a proposed display, it is recommended that the approval of local authorities be obtained before the display is used.

MODERN PROJECTION

PROJECTION • SOUND REPRODUCTION • ACOUSTICS

WHAT ACOUSTIC TESTS CAN TELL TODAY

By S. K. WOLF

The science of acoustics was over-rated at first. How far has it advanced?

LIKE EVERY other new discovery, the science of mathematical acoustic study has had to overcome doubt and skepticism. These have arisen, for the most part, from two sources.

One has been the apathy that is inherent in the reception of any innovation. The doubters have argued that as long as sound is passable, audiences are satisfied and that if sound quality were bettered audiences would fail to appreciate the improvement.

The argument holds water about as firmly as the old fallacy that hogs were supposed to love to revel in mud and muck. They had never been given anything else. The moment they were given dry, clean surroundings they thrived even more.

Likewise, the public reception accorded improved sound quality, not only through equipment refinement and development, but also through the study and betterment of theatre acoustics, has shown definitely that a large part of the public, at least, is sound conscious and that sound quality bears a definite relation to the box office receipts.

The second obstacle modern acoustic science has had to overcome has been the misconceptions and lack of knowledge regarding it. Even today it is still in the "mystic" stage. People who have heard about it and been impressed by it are still somewhat hazy as to just what it is.

There is a justifiable reason for this. The exact science of acoustic study as it has been developed today is still so recent that the time has been inadequate to disseminate a broad understanding of how it has been developed, what it accomplishes, and in what respects it perfects the study of acoustics as it was formerly practiced.

Certain fundamental principles of acoustics established by Sabine, who is generally recognized as the father of this science, still hold good today. But whereas Sabine had to depend for his calculations entirely upon the fallible judgment of the human ear, modern acoustic science has instruments, developed within the last two years by the Bell Telephone Laboratories, that are capable of measuring sound both qualitatively and quantitatively with mathematical precision. They have eliminated from the field of acoustic study the guess work, the pitting of one person's ear calculations against another's.

THE ACOUSTIC engineer enters a theatre armed with a noise meter and a reverberation meter. These instruments enable him to determine the amount of noise in a house and the reverberation time in every part of the auditorium. The result of this survey is the compilation of data procured with exactitude. To supplement these statistics he has the architect's blueprints and a vast library of the acoustic properties of every material used in theatre construction and furnishing. His files of acoustic problems, gathered from months of experience, enable him to analyze the figures the instruments supply.

Take the B—— Theatre as an example. The name of the house is omitted for obvious reasons. It is a first-run theatre in a large city. It has an 1,800 seating capacity. The complaint that had reached the acoustic department read something like this:

"Sound not intelligible in entire house . . . a general confusion of sound . . . echoes in balcony."

Knowing that intelligibility is affected either by the amount of noise in the theatre, or by the period of reverberation, or both, the engineer makes exact observations with his instruments.

The noise meter determines the amount of noise, which is the index of the extent to which noise must be reduced to preseve good intelligibility.

The B—— theatre showed a surplus of noise, interfering with sound intelligibility, that emanated from the ventilating system. Further investigation revealed that the source was not the motor, nor the commutator, nor the belt, but the fan. In this instance a little oiling was all that was necessary to eliminate the noise obstruction.

THE PART that reverberation time played in affecting the intelligibility required more detailed study. Readings in this instance were taken with the reverberation meter, in six different parts of the house, four in the orchestra and two in the balcony.

The proper reverberation time for each theatre will vary according to cubical content, shape of theater, and intensity of original sound. The figures for any number of theatres bear a definite relation to each other. Having established an empirical value based on an accumulation of acoustic data and qualitative observations.

In the case of the B—— Theatre, it was established that the reverberation time should be between the limits of from 2 to 2½ seconds at 100 cycles, from between 1½ to 2 seconds at 200 cycles, and from between 1 to 1½ seconds for 500 cycles. But the measurements of the reverberation meter indicated that conditions were unsatisfactory, showing a reading of 5 seconds at 100 cycles, 4 seconds at 200 cycles, and 3 seconds at 500 cycles.

The readings showed not only that the reverberation time was so long as to interfere with intelligibility, but also exactly how over-long it was. In effect, they analyzed the confusion of overlapping sounds.

With these figures established indisputably the cause was fairly easy to determine because of past experience with similar problems. The conclusion was that the theatre lacked sound-absorbing qualities. The vast library of data on the acoustic qualities of every material made it possible to recommend a satisfactory solution.

In the case of the B—— theatre, a 1-inch mineral wool coating distributed on parts of the walls, carpets for the aisles and plush covers for the seats, eliminated the defects. At a subsequent test the reverberation time corresponded to a satisfactory standard for a theatre of the cubical content and construction of the B—— theatre, and the sound was intelligible.

THE B—— THEATRE furnishes an average example. There are other instances where there is too much sound-absorption instead of too little. In such a case the accurate readings of the reverberation and sound meters disclose the fact. The remedy is at hand in lessening, instead of increasing, the sound-absorbing qualities of the walls, floors and furnishings.

In one instance a covering of oil paint had totally nullified the sound-absorbing qualities of the walls. In another instance a large dome over the center of the auditorium acted as a focussing agent for sounds which then mingled and echoed in a distorted jumble that made a Tower of Babel out of the theatre. The solution in this case was the construction of an artificial ceiling under the dome, shutting off the sounds from their vault where they had merged to rumble forth like distant thunder.

Two points should be emphasized in the modern study of acoustics. One has been that the accumulation of vast data on acoustic ills and remedies has made it possible to prescribe for any given situation with almost unfailing certainty of effecting a cure. The second is that the secret of the modern science lies not so much in knowing that a given acoustic condition is unsatisfactory, but the exact degree to which it is unsatisfactory.

Naturally the growing recognition of acoustic science has opened the door to persons who operate without scientific knowledge of the subject and who impose upon the technical ignorance of their clients. The answer for the exhibitor who wishes to save himself from wasted expense is twofold. Let him investigate the character and background of the individual or organization offering acoustic guidance. Let him ask for a record of experience, for proof of extensive research in acoustic surveys that qualify the preferred service to make recommendations, for evidence of exact mathematical readings to show that the work is being conducted along modern lines of acoustic science and not by the guess method.

Nor must the field of investigation be limited merely to the acoustic consulting service. It is equally important that the contractor who is selected to execute the recommendations of the consulting service should be one who has a background of experience and the knowledge of training in this field to make a sincere and intelligent application of the corrective recommendations that consultation has made.

Professedly the science of acoustics has only begun to realize its field of usefulness as far as industry in general is concerned. But as far as the theatre field is concerned, it can be said safely that both in thoroughness of research and material, acoustic science has reached the point where a qualified consulting service can survey, study and recommend with assurance that its recommendation will result in elimination of the defects.

Not for a moment do we think that Mr. and Mrs. John W. Public would be interested in Better Theatres. Much less John, Jr., and little Nell. Nor one nor t'other knows whether sound gets to the screen by wire or by special messenger, and far less do they care. To Nellie, indeed, travel ghost is preferably a mysterious psychic force that seizes certain movie stars on their frequent trips abroad. No matter. In the making of Better Theatres, we're fundamentally considering her and Johnnie, and their pa and ma. Because to serve the motion picture theatre business constructively is to seek, initiate, explain and urge better ways for the theatre to serve its customers. We believe that Responsible Journalism in this field calls for an editorial policy based on the conviction that the motion picture is considerably larger than within-the-industry ambitions, much more permanent than any individual career. The motion picture long ago ceased to be an invention possessed by somebody or other. It is an instrument by now which mankind has devised for itself to give to all people the stimulation and enlightenment previously accessible to only the few. To these people belongs the art. Those who would possess the business must serve the people in that art, as well as possible today, as much better as possible tomorrow. To this end the business must be adapted, in this mission it must be stabilized. That is the point of view on which the editorial policy of Better Theatres is based. Addressing theatre management and technicians, we're yet looking beyond to those who can fire us all whenever they like.

F. H. RICHARDSON'S COMMENT

• • AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES •

DISADVANTAGES IN USE OF PERFORATED SCREENS

[The following paper was read by Mr. Richardson at a joint meeting, May 17, of the New York Section of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, and the Projection Practice Committee, with Harry Rubin, chairman of the committee, presiding. The paper elicited lengthy discussion (unrecorded because no official stenographer was present), which expressed a general opinion that unperforated screens may be used to advantage in a large number of theatres. It also was the generally expressed opinion that better results would be had with loud speakers at the sides and top, rather than at the bottom of the screen, especially in theatres having a stage.—THE EDITOR.]

WITH THE PASSING of time it seems increasingly evident that the increased cost and added trouble and inconvenience entailed by placing loudspeakers at the rear of theatre screens and perforating said screens with a vast number of openings to permit the passage of sound, very considerably more than outweighs the admitted minor benefits derived from such procedure.

The fact that sound engineers declare such procedure to be best should not be accepted as final. Sound engineers would, in the very nature of things, be inclined to favor sound so far as it is possible to do so. Very naturally they would strive to secure the best acoustical effects possible, even at the expense of some damage in other directions. They should not be too much censured for that. They would hardly be good sound engineers did they not regard sound excellence as paramount to every other issue.

As a matter of fact, I think we may all agree that some advantage does accrue to sound in some theatres by locating the loudspeakers at the rear of the screen and projecting sound through screen perforations. Sound engineers claim, and I think with justice, that while theatre patrons seated directly in front of the screen, or at slight angle thereto, will, save in exceptional individual cases, probably be unable to detect any difference in effect as between sound projected through screen perforations and sound projected by loud speakers located at top or bottom of a solid surface screen, the fact remains that patrons seated at the side down front, and therefore at large angles to the screen surface, will have realization of the fact that the sound does not come from the point of its supposed sources; namely, the actor's lips, musical instruments, etc.

This admission was made to me personally by one of the heads of one of the largest sound equipment installations and servicing institutions in North America, if not in the entire world. I have pinned several sound engineers of less note down to essentially the same admission. One sound engineer of high position and admitted high capability has expressed strong doubts of the wisdom of using perforated screens with loud speakers located at the rear. There are today theatres operating successfully with a solid surface screen, with loudspeakers located beneath the screen, in competition with other theatres using perforated screens. Their patrons, so they tell me, find no fault with the sound.

In this connection let it be noted that the list of objections I shall set forth later on applies to both perforated and porous screens.

SOUND ENGINEERS assert that locating loudspeakers at the rear of perforated or porous screens causes the loss of only a comparatively small percentage of the sound, which claim, strange as it may seem, appears to be substantially correct. Measurements made by very capable engineers discloses the fact that there is a difference in sound volume as between loudspeakers having a perforated screen in front of them, and loud speakers in the open, of only half a decible in the low frequencies, and 3.50 db. in the high—high in this case representing 10,000 cycles per second. The falling off is very gradual between 55 and 6,000 cycles. Above the last named figure the drop is rather sharp. However, it must be remembered that 3.50 db. is but little more than noticeable to the average person.

It may seem strange that the drop is so low when it is remembered that the screen perforations constitute only approximately 9% of the total screen area (figures supplied by one of our oldest, best informed screen manufacturers), from which fact it might well be argued that but little more than that percentage of sound would reach the auditorium. In explanation of this phenomenon I quote Dr. A. N. Goldsmith, president of the S. M. P. E., who says:

"Screens now in use in motion picture theatres, for the most part have the loud speakers located at their rear. Instead of a solid screen surface such as was employed for silent picture projection, the body of the screen has a vast number of small holes or perforations, the same arranged in regular pattern, their purpose being to permit the passage of sound from the rear of the screen to the main body of air in the theatre auditorium. While it is true the total area of these perforations is but a relatively small percentage of the total area of the screen surface, the fact remains that for several reasons, which it is my purpose to explain, very much more sound gets through than a casual consideration would seem to indicate.

"Sound waves to a very considerable extent possess the power of bending around corners. That this is true is proven by the fact that one may stand in a corridor beside a sound-proof wall and converse with a person on the opposite side of said wall, provided there be an open door or other gap therein. In such case it is evident the sound waves must and do bend around in passing through the opening, else sound could not possibly be audible between persons so situated. Experiments of somewhat similar nature have made it evident that sound waves do not travel in straight lines only, but in other than straight lines when obstructions are met.

"If in some location where much outside noise prevails, a window be opened, immediately a great volume of noise will enter. The room will be filled with sound. If we close the window so that 92% of its opening will be covered, we will discover that the sound has not been reduced 92%, or in fact in anything like that percentage. As a matter of fact, the window must be almost entirely closed before there will be any large reduction in sound. Even with the window sash up just a little, an astonishing amount of noise enters—again for the reason that sound bends around corners and enters from all directions through even a very small opening.

"And so it is with screen perforations. A very great deal more sound gets through than would be expected, considering the small percentage of the total screen area they cover.

"The low-cycle (longest) waves bend around corners best. Action very similar to that of sound waves may be examined by watching the action of waves or ripples of water of different lengths bend around obstructions, as for example, a floating log. In sound the long waves correspond to the lower frequencies; that is to say, the lower notes. Because of the fact that the long waves bend best, it follows that they get through screen perforations with comparative ease. Therefore the sound theatre audiences hear is more shy of high notes than of the lower notes. This effect may, however, be evened up or compensated for by suitable design of the loudspeakers and amplifying circuits.

"There is another minor reason why more sound reaches theatre audiences than would be expected. The entire surface of screens transmits sound at least to some extent, just as do thin partitions. Due to its usually rather porous nature the amount transmitted by the unperforated screen areas is small, but transmission nevertheless does occur. In this case too, it is true that the lower notes are favored.

"A well designed perforated screen, while it transmits a very large percentage of the sound, gives preference, as I have said, to the lower notes. The higher frequencies therefore must be to some extent boosted, if correct balance is to be maintained."

Our thanks are due to Dr. Goldsmith for this very lucid, understandable explanation of what has been to many a very puzzling point. We must then accept the fact that, strange as it may seem, all but a relatively small percentage of the sound can and does get through perforated screens, provided they be properly and well constructed. We may also concede that there is advantage in locating loudspeakers at the rear, and perforating screens in theatres where conditions are such that a considerable portion of audiences will be seated at a large angle to the screen surface, which in effect usually means where the front rows of seats are closer than they should be to the screen in wide auditoriums.

HAVING DONE all this and thus given the sound men a square deal and the first inning, let us no wexamine those various items in opposition, all of which have to do with added expense and additional inconvenience and trouble to theatre men, assuming that sound men, favorable as their calling makes them to sound, will remember that after all sound is only a portion of the entertainment offered by motion picture theatres. They may also well consider the fact that whereas the motion picture lived and prospered many years before the advent of sound, and might again live and even prosper without sound, the fact remains that sound could not possibly either live or prosper without the picture. It then seems clearly to be the duty of sound engineers and sound proponents not to try to go too far in the matter of advocating sound excellence regardless of all other considerations.

It must be remembered that the average exhibitor struggles along under an almost back-breaking burden of absolutely necessary, inescapable overhead expense. The burden is in fact so heavy that many very capable men have in years past been unable to stand up under it, and have failed. It then surely is the poorest kind of poor policy to force upon him any expense which will not be counterbalanced, or more than counterbalanced, by additional box office receipts brought in because of improvement in the entertainment he offers. That I believe we may all agree upon as being entirely reasonable.

We have agreed that the rear location of loudspeakers and the projection of sound through perforated screens does work some appreciable improvement with respect to any portion of the audience seated at a considerable angle to the screen surface. We do not admit that this condition exists to any considerable extent in average theatres, or in a really objectionable degree in any but a relatively small percentage of our theatres. I admit of no other possible advantage accruing from such procedure, nor do I admit the benefit to be nearly worth its cost, save in a relatively few badly designed theatres.

The use of perforated screens compels increased cost in several directions. It may also mean some loss of business because of injury to the beauty of the screen image in ways hereinafter to be explained.

It is quite true the actual added cost of perforation, viewed merely as a mechanical operation, is not high. The average seems to be approximately $.04 per square foot, or about $10 for an 18 x 13.50 foot screen. Unfortunately, however, the expense does not stop there. It has indeed hardly begun. What is the added expense? Let us see:

The average perforated screen has in excess of 25 holes per square inch. Many have very much in excess of that number. Twenty-five holes per square inch is 25 x 144 = 2,160 holes per square foot, or a total of 524,880 holes in a screen 18 x 13.50 feet. Surely we cannot reasonably assume such an enormous number of holes to have no effect upon visual results, even though they be not individually visible to the eye. The effect is there and it is undoubtedly injurious to the screen image, despite what sound men say.

These holes delete approximately 10% of the reflection surface of the screen, hence reduce its reflection power by that amount. There can be no argument against that, and admitting its truth, we must also admit that if reflection powers equal to that of a similar unperforated screen is to be maintained, the light incident upon the perforated screen must be increased by 10%, which of course means a 10% increase in power bills right at the beginning. All that seems hardly to be a matter admissible to argument.

Incidentally, as a minor thought, any increase in electric power means more rapid deterioration of the equipment handling it, to say nothing of, in many cases, heavier wire circuits, conduits, etc., entailing expenditure of money, all of which may possibly add to cost of installation and certainly to overhead expense in operation.

However, while the effect of surface deletion through perforation adds approximately 10% to the bills for projection current, and added installation and deterioration caused by the heavier current consumption increases this in considerable degree, the matter by no manner of means stops there, because of the fact that perforated screens fall off very rapidly as compared with solid screens of like composition in the matter of reflection power.

IN ALL THEATRES we know that air circulates through screen perforations to some extent. In many the circulation is heavy. If we suspend a bit of new, clean paper in the air, punch a small hole in it and cause air to circulate through that opening, we shall presently find the hole to be surrounded by a ring of discoloration composed in part of dust deposited by the moving air, and in part by the action of gases imparted to air in any inclosed space where large numbers of people gather, particularly if smoking is permitted. Such discoloration will be more rapid in some theatres than in others and in some localities than in others, as may be readily understood. In Pittsburgh, for example, where the air is laden with carbon particles, it would be rapid. In Montrose, Colorado, where the air is very clean and pure, it would be relatively slow. The speed of deposit will of course vary with the amount of air circulating through the perforations.

It then follows that the reflection power of perforated screens will fall off very much more rapidly than would be the case with solid surface screens of like characteristics. All this must, I am sure, be conceded even by proponents of the perforated screen. What is its meaning?

The query is easily answered. In order that the brilliancy of perforated screens be maintained at normal level, as must be done to maintain results at maximum, the power of the projector light source must be increased much more rapidly than would be necessary were there no perforations through which air could circulate. That is self evident. It should require no supporting argument. Just what it may mean in money cost it is impossible to estimate accurately. As a matter of fact, the power of the light source is not usually increased, with the result that screen brilliancy falls off, and with it the beauty of the screen image, very rapidly. The loss is insidious and so gradual that usually it is not realized until a great amount of damage has been done. Certainly it reacts against the box office, though in just what degree no one may say.

When the condition finally becomes so bad that it can no longer be tolerated, the usual remedy is either to have the screen cleaned or to have it recoated. But there again lies trouble. If recoating is resorted to, it means plenty of trouble, muss and bother, with some damage to the perforations. Also it means plenty of expense. If cleaning is resorted to, it means loss, for up to date we know of no screen surface which does not lose a portion of its reflection power with the first cleaning and with each successive one thereafter. Any director of projection or high class projectionist will corroborate that statement.

Exactly what all this amounts to in cost no one knows, nor can one know except in the most general way—for the reason that it varies so widely in different theatres and different localities. However, it is reasonable to assume it will operate to add an expense equal at least to an average of 10% of the projection current bill. Admitting that to be a percentage fixed upon merely to enable us to make some comparison, but nevertheless one well within probabilities, let us see how it works out in practice.

AT PRESENT I know of no figures available from which the average bill for current used at motion picture projector light sources in all classes of theatres can be computed. However, from the director of projection of a large theatre chain I have secured exact figures for one big theatre. The cost, however, is based upon a very low power rate granted because of the enormous current consumption of this circuit of theatres in New York City. It would not be available to ordinary current users. They would be compelled to pay a higher, and in many cases a very much higher rate. The figure is $5.76 for a day of 15 hours.

However, assuming the rate to be only $5.00 per day, the added expense due to the use of a perforated screen still would be high. As has been set forth, approximately 10% of the screen reflection surface is eliminated by perforation, hence that much light must be added to the remaining surface if the total is to equal that of the solid screen surface. Nor can it justly be said that since the remaining surface will still have the same brilliancy, the effect will be the same. That is not true for any one of several reasons.

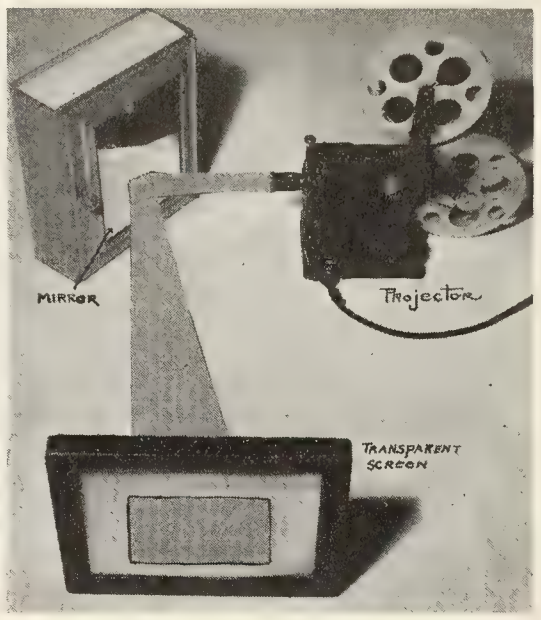
If we accept 10% of projector current cost as sufficient to represent the injury due to more rapid discoloring of the perforated screen surface set up by action already described, we then have a total of 20% loss.

Five dollars per day means $35 for a seven day week, or $1,820 for 52 weeks, 25% of which is $264, the amount chargeable directly to loss through the use of perforated screens.

However, I do not wish to be understood as setting that up as the actual loss. As an average for all theatres it would be too high. Each individual projectionist may easily compute the exact cost per day of the current used at the projector light sources, whereupon multiplying that by the number of days the theatre operates per year, he will be able to advise his manager as to the loss incident to screen perforation, within reasonably accurate limits at least. True, 20% is more or less of a guess, but nevertheless after an experience of many years in estimating projection performance I am prepared to say it will be found very far wrong.



My contention is that, save for that portion of audiences seated at the side down front in wide auditoriums where the front rows of seats are too close to the screen, just as excellent and possibly even better results may be had by using a solid screen with the loudspeakers located either just above or just below the screen, carefully positioned, of course, and hidden by any desirable decoration. Location of the loudspeakers at the side of a screen is bad pratice. Not only does the bottom or top provide better chance for good sound distribution, particularly as between main floor and balcony, but also, save in badly distorted screen images, it places them much nearer the general field of action on the screen.

In all this I have not intentionally in any degree misstated or overdrawn anything. If what I have set forth be true, as I firmly believe it to be, then it must be admitted the exhibitor is paying a very high price for highly questionable benefits. If it be true that sufficient injury is done the screen image to counterbalance the benefit to sound, then whatever the money cost may be to an individual theatre is nothing more than pure waste, and waste is, you will all admit, not good.

REAR PROJECTION BY REFLECTION

IRL GORDON, projectionist of Akron, O., puts forward the following: "On page 24 of April 8 issue of Better Theatres appears an inquiry from Merle Burdette, Lyric Theatre, Casey, Ill., relative to rear projection of sound films. In answering you say it is being done, but only with special sound equipment in which the projector sound optical system is reversed from right to left, so as to coincide with the reversed film, which means a costly piece of special apparatus.

"Possibly the kink I have used with the old silent films might be of value if one found it necessary to use rear projection temporarily. It might even be installed permanently if one did a bit of experimenting to get the thing exactly in its best form. With my plan it is unnecessary to alter anything on the projector, nor need the film itself be reversed in the projector. It is threaded in just as usual.

"To illustrate the plan I have made a photograph upon which the path of the light beam has been painted. The only precaution necessary is to select an opticians' mirror. If an ordinary one be used there wil be a double reflection, one from the silver coating on the mirror back, and one from the first surface of the glass. The latter will be faint, but always present.

"An optician's mirror is one silvered on the front side of the glass, so that the light does not penetrate the glass at all. Any optician should be able to show you one and tell where they may be obtained. They may be had in various sizes. One 10 inches square should serve. It would cost perhaps ten or twelve dollars, which is a small item as compared with special sound heads required by the other plan. The mirror may be established at any convenient point in front of the projection lens, but preferably about 12 inches. Its angle must of course be so adjusted that the image is thrown in proper position on the transparent screen. It is best to locate the projector as close to the screen center as possible, since if the angle be too great an appreciable keystone effect will result. With a good mirror, kept clean, light loss would be very little.

Slow snapshot of title on screen projected from rear by Mr. Gordon's method. Blur was due to unsteadiness of intermittent, while slight trace of double image is result of use of plain mirror, instead of optical mirror.

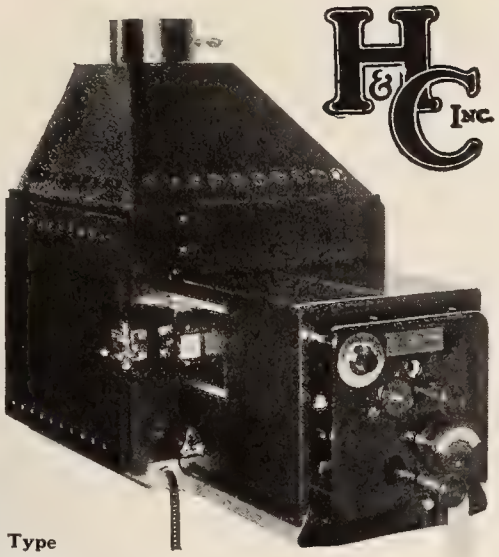
"I have myself used the plan in a hospital where crowded quarters would not permit projection in the usual way. Results were very good. The matter may easily be tried out experimentally by means of a 16-mm. projector and a thin mirror of good quality, using a sheet of thin white paper for a screen."



Irl Gordon has done some very excellent work in projection. He is now, I believe, engaged in newspaper photographic work. I am inclined to give credit to any statement he may make regarding projection matters. Moreover, it seems apparent that with such a mirror as he suggests, the thing would be really practical. As regards the keystone spoken of, if the projector be set as he suggests the distortion would be very slight and would not be noticeable if the aperture were filled in slightly and filed, as is ordinary proceedure with up-high projection rooms. I would suggest the plan as worthy of serious consideration, at least where temporary rear projection is desired. Remember, since the beam width would be small when it is reflected back past the projector, the latter could be located pretty close, sidewise, to the screen center.

EVER AND AGAIN: OILY, DIRTY PRINTS

H. P. SCHLINK of the Grand theatre in El Paso, Ill., writes, "I would like very much to know just what percentage clearer the recording on a new print is as compared with a print that is dirty and completely covered with oil. We are so located that practically all surrounding cities use the films ahead of us. By the time they reach us they are for the most part plenty dirty and smeared with oil. With the few we do get that are clean we notice the sound is much clearer and has a better tone. Does oil on the sound track affect the tone, or is it our imagination? We have no way of removing the oil, and it seems the exchanges just plain won't do it."

For which the exchanges should be thoroughly ashamed of themselves. Certainly dirt and oil affect sound tone. It sets up distortion. It also reduces volume and gives you a very poor screen image. It makes the picture hard on the eyes of your patrons. In fact, the effect is bad in every possible way, both as to screen image and sound (though I should hardly care to express it in terms of percentage).

If the management accepts such service —well, the projectionist is of course helpless. It most emphatically is not up to you to clean films sent oil-smeared and dirty. However, as to the oil, it is a sad commentary on the projectionists who use the films ahead of you. The exchange

If I were your manager I would take one of the oil-soaked, dirty reels and hold a pow-wow with the exchange manager. Whatever the price your management pays, no matter how low, it automatically assumes that films reasonably clean, without oil on them and in safe condition to project, will be supplied. If the films are received otherwise, then the exchange has not fulfilled properly its contract, and that is that.

AN OPINION ON ONE-MAN ISSUE

SOME WHILE ago the National Research Council at Ottawa, Canada, asked the Projection Practice Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers certain questions, the nature of which may readily be inferred from reading what follows. The Projection Practice Committee went to some pains in the preparation of a reply, which the committee refused permission to publish, holding it to be a matter for consideration by the Council. James Finn, member of the Projection Practice Committee, later obtained permission from the Council and passed it along to me, with the remark, "This should have the widest possible publicity." So here is the Projection Practice Committee's opinion in full:

"With respect to your first question, relative to the percentage of theatres in the United States which have more than one projectionist on duty at one time, we regret that we possess no data on this subject. In answer to your second question, we are unable to state authoritatively what may have been the original reasons for employing more than one man on a projection shift, but it is our opinion that these reasons may have been the following:

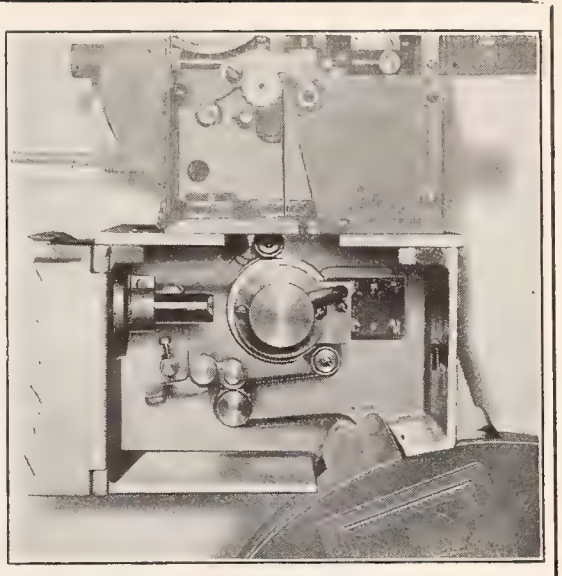
"The continuous duties of the projectionist, requiring skilled and fatiguing attention, include:

"1. Threading one projector while the second projector still is in motion.

"2. The necessity for constant care in the matter of keeping the picture sharply in focus upon the screen and maintaining a uniformity lighted picture.

"3. Controlling the sound volume and maintaining the proper level so as to insure maximum entertainment value.

"4. Trimming the arcs of projectors and, if used, those of spotlights and effect machines.



"5. Watching for breaks in the film.

"6. Constant alertness in guarding against fire and the necessity for instantaneous action in stopping the projector, closing the projector dowser, and subsequently, the projection room ports.

"7. Changing-over from one projector to another without any noticeable interruption in the show.

"8. Rewinding of film reels, with accompanying duties of inspection of the film for loose splices, tears, etc.

"9. Splicing the film.

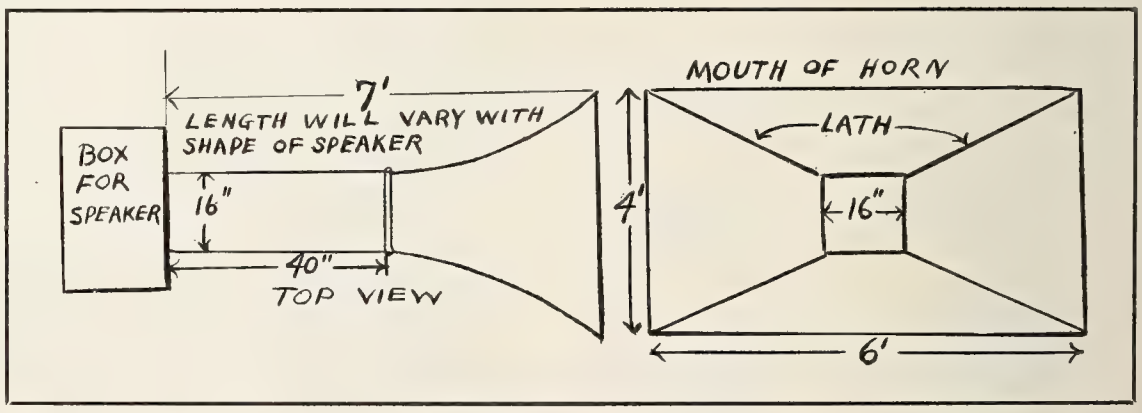
"The foregoing information reflects the consensus of members of this committee as adduced at a committee meeting to which your communication was presented—Projection Practice Committee, S.M.P.E., Harry Rubin, Chairman."

Any man, exhibitor or otherwise, must in common honesty admit that there is absolutely nothing in any degree overdrawn in the letter quoted. That is obviously true, even though it be a powerful argument for the two-man projection room shift. A man cannot possibly do two things at one and the same time if the two things must be done at widely separated places. No use arguing about that. Even if it be possible to do them both at the same place, no man can possibly do two things at one and the same time and do them both well.

A SELF-MADE HORN THAT MAY HELP



K. F. TRIM, exhibitor in Mirando, Tex., tells us how he constructed a horn for his dynamic speaker. He writes, "I have made note of your recent comments on use of unperforated screens for sound pictures. I am myself using an unperforated screen with loudspeaker under it. Results are excellent. I operate another small theatre using cloth screen with loud speaker at its rear with good results, but I must renew the cloth every six months as it gets too dirty to reflect well.

"Recently I tried an experiment which proved so successful that I am moved to tell you, and through you, your many readers about it. Many small exhibitors using dynamic speakers fail to get satisfactory results, but because of the hard times do not feel able to buy more suitable equipment. That was precisely my own condition, and I overcame the trouble at very small money cost, plus some careful work, by building a horn for my speaker. It is 4 feet high by 6 feet across at its opening, or mouth; and 7 feet from speaker to mouth of horn, though 40 inches of its length next to the speaker is in the form of a tube, which has an outside diameter of 16 inches.

"I proceeded as follows. Any one can, by working carefully and exercising a little patience, do likewise. First I made the front end frame out of what is known as 'blind stops', being lath ¾ x 1¼ inches. They may be had at almost any lumber yard and in almost any length desired. I then made two frames, 16 inches outside measure of the aforesaid lath, which gave an inside measurement of 13½ inches, since the lath is 1¼ inches wide. These frames form the ends of the 40 inch section. I then nailed lath 7 feet long to each corner of these frames, and to each corner of the horn mouth, thus completing the framework of the proposed horn.

"Next I cut sheeting cloth in suitable pattern to form a snug-fitting cover for the frame, sewed it up on a sewing machine, and stretched it over the frame. [I presume the best way to do that would be to sew up all but one corner of the cloth cover, then finish the job by hand, stretching the cloth on the framework as the seam is sewed.—F. H. R.]

"The cloth cover I finally coated heavily with cheap paint and let it dry thoroughly. Then I tackled and got away with a tough job. Obtaining a 5-gallon can, I tore newspapers up as fine as I could (the finer they are shredded up the easier the reduction will be), then I poured water over these scraps and boiled them, stirring vigorously until they were reduced to pulp (only water enough left to prevent burning while boiling). It takes quite a lot of work, this stirring, but the thing can be done.

"When scraps were reduced to pulp, I made some stiff flour paste and added enough to the pulp to make it adhesive. The amount of paste necessary can only be determined by trial of a bit of it. When I had it about right I proceeded to plaster the cloth with the pulp. [Friend Trim did not say how thickly, but presumably from one-fourth to one-half an inch would be satisfactory.—F.H.R.]

"When the 'plaster' was thoroughly dry, I proceeded to coat it with black paint and found I had a real swell-looking job.

"Next I built a wooden box just large enough to contain my 12-inch dynamic speaker after the box had been lined with felt to prevent any echo which might result from sound reflected back from unlined wood sides. The dimensions of the box would of course be dependent upon the size of the speaker.

"I installed the speaker in the box and attached the whole assembly to the horn. I know of no way of determining exactly the best shape for the flare that would be available to the exhibitor. My own was merely the natural bend of the lath after being nailed to the two 16-inch end frames and pulled out to the horn mouth corners. [I suppose a small frame would be necessary half-way between the two end frames to prevent the lath from curving inward when the outer ends are pulled out to the horn mouth corners.—F. H. R.]

"The results, Friend Richardson, as compared with what I got from the dynamic speaker alone, are really wonderful The whole thing is set on a stand or table and may be turned or tilted as desired. I have it so placed and regulated that the sound volume is essentially the same in all parts of the auditorium. Moreover, the horn has cleared up the tone a lot. The total cost was approximately $5, not counting my labor, of course. It should work out in a theatre seating up to, say, 500.

"The reason for the 40-inch section is to confine the sound part of the way, and not just 'turn it loose' at the speaker. It has a tendency to act as a muffle and makes the sound clearer."

On this point I consulted a sound engineer, who said, "The stove-pipe arrangement your correspondent placed between his speaker and the horn may have improved the sound for the reason that it increased the air distance between the front and back of the cone. Increasing the area of a flat baffle board improves the sound in much the same way, as you know. The reason is that waves of air leaving the front of the diaphragm are 180° out of phase with waves leaving the back of the diaphragm, hence if the two meet they tend to cancel out. Since the high frequencies tend to travel more nearly in straight lines, it is chiefly the low notes that are weakened when a speaker is used either without a baffle, or with one that is too small. The result is a tinny sound quality. You may hear this effect by removing the speaker from your radio, where it is baffled by the cabinet, letting it operate while seated on the floor. This is probably what your correspondent has in mind when he speaks of muffling the sound with the 40-inch section."

True, what is known as the "exponential curve" horn flare is supposed to produce the best effect, but it may well be doubted that horns are being made exactly in conformity to exponential requirements.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

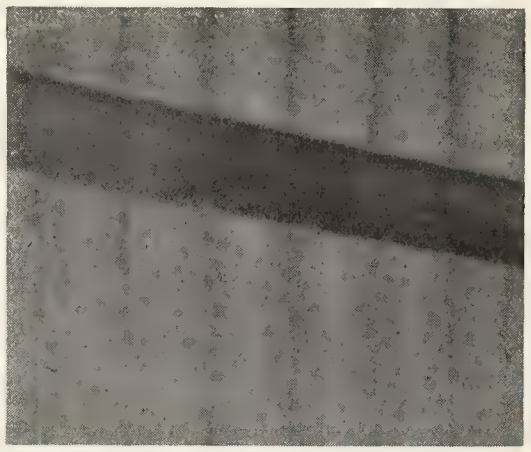
The Question:

I AM GOING to remodel my theatre, but before starting to do so, I made a trip to New York and visited a great many theatres to obtain some ideas. The theatre which appealed to me most was the RKO Roxy in Rockefeller City. I like the wall effect very much, but could not tell of what material it was constructed. It looked to me as if it was a wood veneer. I presume this cost a lot of money, as I heard that the cost of this theatre was very large.

What I would like to ask you is, could I imitate the effect in less expensive materials or could it be obtained by decorating? Also I noticed the ceiling, especially the large center fixture for lights. Of course, such a thing would be way beyond my means. How can I light the ceiling without fixture or chandelier, as I would like to have it as plain as possible. My auditorium adapts itself very much to such a treatment, as my floor plan is about the same shape, except for the columns along the side and rear walls, as in the Roxy auditorium.

I will appreciate it very much if you can advise some inexpensive treatment which would compare along the lines as above described.—F. S. M.

The Answer:



I DO NOT doubt that you were pleasantly impressed with the Roxy auditorium, but I fear as you do, that it would be too expensive a treatment for your theatre.

The walls are of a mahogany veneer cemented to sheets of steel. These steel plates are attached to steel furring. This furring is anchored to the steel frame of the building. There are about 4 inches of space between the surface of the veneer and the building walls, and this space is filled with rockwool. The vertical strips in the wall are also in mahogany. The horizontal bands are of the same veneer, the grain runing horizontally, with bronze strips at top and bottom.

It would be hard indeed to imitate the effect and results in a cheap way, but if you are contented with imitating the effect so that a layman might think the appearance about the same, I suggest that instead of using veneer applied to steel plates, you strip the auditorium walls with furring strips about 1¾ inches thick. Be sure that the surface of this strip is perfectly straight and even.

On these strips apply sheets of wall board with the veneer finish, which is a process put on these sheets. Of course, this is not real veneer, but the effect is pretty good. There are several kinds of these products on the market. If you cannot afford to place strips of bronze on top and bottom of the horizontal bands, have them painted on by the decorator.

Since you cannot have the center fixture for lighting the auditorium, run a light cove along the walls and dome the ceiling slightly. With the proper electrical equipment in the cove, you could light the auditorium satisfactorily. Use at least three colors in the lamps so you can make light changes. Of course a good decorator could do wonders with the ceiling. My advice is keep it as light as possible on account of the dark walls.

Reproduction of photograph of wood veneer wall treatment of the RKO Roxy, New York, indicating the veneer plates and one of the horizontal bands.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to "Better Theatres," 1790 Broadway, New York. They will be answered in this department. None will be answered by mail. Although only initials will be used in signing the questions published, it is a requirement that all letters bear the signature and address of their writers. The replies will be prepared personally by Mr. Hulsken, who is a practical architect and a member of the American Institute of Architects.

The Question:

WE NOTE QUITE often in BETTER THEATRES that you print plans or suggestions on how to construct small theatres. Since we are building a small theatre here to seat about 350 or 400, on a lot 30x80, we would like to have you send us plans or suggestions on how to construct same to meet the modern demands.

We would like to have a small confectionery room in the lobby, either a part of, or separate from the box office. Our building is on a corner, with the left front on the corner side. If you have any such plans or suggestions please favor us with same.—O. H.

The Answer:

SORRY TO STATE again that this department cannot furnish you with plans or sketches, for reasons given at length on several previous occasions, but it will gladly give you suggestions.

Your lot, being only 30x80 feet, is entirely too small for a theatre seating 350 or 400. I take it for granted that you would place the screen against the rear wall, as a stage is entirely out of the question for that size lot. You may have an apron about 8 feet wide. Place the first row of seats 20 feet from the rear wall. The width of the house allows you at most 13 seats across, so that for 350 seats you need 27 rows. Placing them 30 inches back to back, the seats alone will require 67 feet, 6 inches. Then you must add at least 6 feet for foyer or cross-aisle, and with these requirements alone you need already 14 feet, 6 inches more than the depth of your lot.

For lobby or small confectionery store you need at least 15 feet, so the smallest lot which could hold your requirements should be at least 110 feet deep. So I believe you will have to look around for another lot.

If it is a corner lot, you may construct the entrance lobby on a 45° angle of the intersection of the two streets, especially if both streets are of equal importance. If you want to build on the lot which you have, the largest amount of seats in the auditorium will be 169 seats, provided you reduce the dimensions of the parts given above.

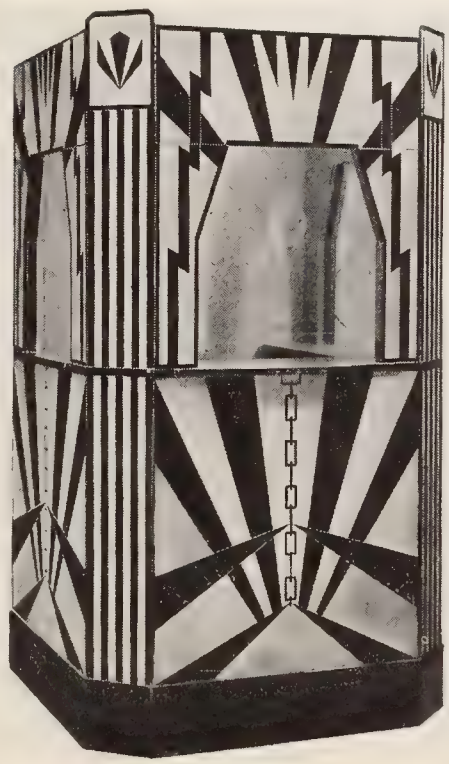
NEW DISPLAY PLAN

● Poster and still display boards, which would be used as a means of advertising theatre programs in the windows of merchants, have been brought out by the Novelty Furniture Manufacturing Company. It is stated that the company will itself seek to contact the merchants, and that the arrangement with the theatre owner will not call for any investment on his part. The theatre operator is permitted to change his advertising cards each time he changes his bill.

The display boards, or frames, are made up in solid black walnut and are mounted on pedestals. They are also equipped with electric clocks to attract attention.



PROJECTION LAMPS

● A new line of Mazda type projection lamps has been developed by the Westinghouse Lamp Company, Bloomfield, N. J., superseding the 100-watt T-8-½, and 250-watt, 50 v. T-10, lamps of the old line by four new lamps, a 100-watt T-8, a 300-watt T-10, a 500-watt T-10, and a 750-watt T-12. Among the changes in design and construction is a "bi-plane" filament. Two filaments supported in parallel planes close together account for the term "bi-plane."

The primary function of the bi-plane filament is to increase the brightness of screen illumination as the result of a more concentrated light source. This filament effects a concentrated spot without a reflecting mirror and was adopted in an attempt to achieve an increase in screen brightness of from 50 to 75 percent.

A black and silver stock model of the line of ticket booths designed to be stationed in any part of the vestibule or lobby, and constructed of a glass product by the Nurre Companies, Inc., of Bloomington, Ind. The material is said to be 40 per cent harder than marble.

Ed Wolk, formerly associated with the Chicago Cinema Equipment Company, has opened offices in Chicago for dealing in theatre supplies.

The new Westinghouse air conditioning equipment has been assigned to the Kroeschell Engineering Company for distribution in the Chicago zone. This company has also been named the territorial dealers for Carbonic Safety Compressors produced by the Worthington Pump & Machinery Corporation and used in cooling. It is announced that sales and installations are not limited, however, to the Chicago area alone, but may be nationwide.

Common Sense of Maintenance and still have a clean theatre. We say, and still have a clean theatre, advisedly from our observation during this period of many reductions in theatre staffs. The cuts in the janitor forces have reacted adversely because such reductions have not developed a new approach to the problem.

MARQUEE AND EXTERIOR SIGNS

THE NEXT GROUP, or Class 6, covers the maintenance of the exterior front, including signs, marquees, attraction frames and box office or vestibule-lobby. We place this class of maintenance in this spot because definitely it has its part in displaying your wares; when maintained properly it is a business-getter. During the hours when your house is not open for business a great number of people will stop to look at stills or other advertising matter on display. While doing this they formulate their opinion upon how ably your theatre is run, how clean it is inside, and how successful you are. It is an ex-

PHYSICAL DETERIORATION

CLASS 7 covers all those burdensome problems such as keeping toilet fixtures functioning properly, down spouts and roof in condition, door checks in order; keeping mechanical equipment, such as heating boilers, pipe systems and radiators and traps, in proper condition; also the cleaning of switchboards and the replacement of lines on the stage. Taking care of such items of this nature is always very burdensome from all points of view, especially financial, because money so expended is never appreciated by the general public and does not attract one red cent toward the box office. However, from the physical standpoint of your property such expenditures are often very necessary and must be taken care of approximately when they are required.

Our one great criticism of many of the procedures covering such conditions in the past is that the history of any particular case often indicates a basic or chronic wrong condition, but instead of correcting the basic condition which might, for example, save $100, the manager makes only temporary correction which costs, say, $10 or $15. Repeating such temporary treatment only a few times will soon amount to such a sum that indicates that you could well have afforded to have made the basic and right expenditure from the start.

RECONDITIONING AND IMPROVEMENTS

CLASS 8, including all those items which generally improve your theatre and property, are a group which we don't have to spend much time on here. If each of our theatres were in order down to and including the first seven classifications, we should have our hands full so far as maintenance is concerned for the balance of the year. However, this classification is of importance and in the past has represented a very substantial part of all maintenance. There are some instances where items falling in this classification are closely related to your plans for the future business of your theatres. Sometimes it is necessary to do this type of work in order to meet new competition.

Realizing all of these arguments and thinking of many more which each of you might present to us, our word of advice or caution is: Don't make investments in large improvements to your theatre properties merely in order to secure a larger share of only temporary business. In making such a statement we have particular reference to items that might be classified as major alterations, large decorating jobs involving the entire changes in color scheme, a refixturing job, or similar projects. Many times we have heard theatre managers and other higher-ups argue for changes in seating capacities, or rearrangement of seats, the installation of an organ, the enlarging of a lobby, or of increasing existing facilities for rest rooms, smoking rooms, toilets, etc., in the belief that such alterations would attract more patronage, either transient, seasonal or from a wider rural territory. Experience has shown that unless that additional temporary business is an actual reality and present, such expensive changes have never actually created any more business and therefore were not justified. In the future we are going to think longer and more carefully over such problems, because we can't afford to be wrong as frequently as we have been in the past.

Theatre Law in New Court Decisions

narily regulate the conduct of human affairs. It is the failure to use ordinary care or skill by one sought to be charged with negligence in the management of his property or person. It is not intrinsic or absolute, but relative, and always relates to circumstances of time, place or persons."

LIABILITY IN ACCIDENT OF UNUSUAL CAUSE

A THEATRE owner is bound to exercise ordinary care to foresee or guard against any ordinary danger which is likely to effect injury to theatre patrons. However, a theatre owner is not liable in damages for an injury sustained by a patron, where it is shown that such injury was effected by an unusual circumstance.

Case:

For example, in Hawkins v. Maine & New Hampshire Theatres Company (164 Atl. 628), it was disclosed that the manager of a theatre advertised that a balloon would be given to each child purchasing a 10c ticket. These tickets admitted the holder to the balcony, which was well filled with children, mostly boys. Several of the children had rubber bands, which in a few instances they used to snap paper pellets at the balloons; but these acts were done when the ushers and the attendants were not looking. One boy, thirteen years old, who sat in the front row, came to the theatre with a sling shot and some BB-shot. With this sling shot and the BB-shot, when the ushers were not looking. he fired at two balloons. One of these shots struck another child in the eye which caused blindness.

The blinded child filed suit against the theatre owner to recover damages for the injury whose counsel contended that the theatre owner was negligent in failing to provide a sufficient number of ushers or attendants in the balcony to prevent the children from effecting such injuries. However, the higher court refused to hold the theatre owner liable, and said:

Decision:

"The obligation which the proprietor of a theatre or amusement enterprise owes to his guests has been clearly set forth. He must guard them not only against dangers of which he has actual knowledge, but also against those which he should reasonably anticipate. . . . The failure to carry out such duty is negligence. A recovery may be had, even though the willful or negligent act of a third person intervenes and contributes to the injury, provided such act should have been foreseen. . . .

The management of this theatre might well have been charged with notice that the filling of the balcony with children and the giving out of balloons would result in boisterous and unruly conduct, but . . . it was under no obligation to provide an attendant for every child, or to anticipate the isolated willful, and sudden act of one boy, the natural tendency of which was to inflict serious harm upon another. There is no evidence that such an incident ever had happened before or that the defendant (theatre owner) had any warning whatsoever that it was likely to take place. It was not a danger which it was bound to have foreseen or to have guarded against."

NECESSITY TO SHOW RESPONSIBILITY FOR DEFECT

THE OWNER of a theatre building is not liable in damages for an injury sustained unless evidence indicates conclusively that the nuisance occasioning the injury existed at the time the premises were rented, or the structure was in such a condition that it would be likely to become a nuisance in the ordinary and reasonable use of the same for the purpose for which it was constructed, and the landlord failed to repair it.

Case:

For illustration, in the late case of Gray v. Fox West Coast Service Corporation (18 P. [2d] 797), it was shown that the Fox West Coast Service Company was in possession of a building known as Fox theatre and leased it for the purpose of operation of a place of amusement. One night, a patron who had purchased a ticket, entered the theatre and on account of the fact that a light, which was intended to illuminate a step, had been extinguished he slipped and fell suffering severe injuries.

The injured patron, instead of filing suit against the theatre operator, sued the Fox West Coast Service Corporation owner of the building. The counsel for the injured patron contended that the owner of the building was liable because of his negligence in failing to replace the extinguished light. Also, it was contended that the step constituted a structural defect in the building which should have been repaired by the owner of the building.

Decision:

Notwithstanding these arguments, and although the lower court held the injured patron entitled to recover damages, the higher court reversed this verdict, and stated the following important law:

"The presence of the step itself, if not out of condition, was no evidence of faulty construction. No evidence was offered to show that the step was inherently dangerous of itself, or that its presence there constituted a structural danger or menace to safety, provided, of course, it was properly lighted. . . . Apparently, then, the failure to have the step lighted must have been the fault or negligence of some one. It could only have been the defendant corporation, who was considered the owner of the building, or the lessee. . . . If the relation of landlord and tenant obtained for that day, and the stage hands —the operators of the lighting system— were the employes of the tenant, the landlord could not be liable for the injuuries sustained by plaintiff.

"The general rule as regards the use of premises is as follows: 'In the case of injuries to third persons resulting from the condition or use of these premises, it is a general rule that prima facie the breach of duty, and therefore the liability, is that of the occupant and not of the landlord, and that in order to render the latter liable more must be shown than merely that the premises on which or from which the injury arose were leased by him to another.' "

ACCEPTING BENEFITS RESULTS IN LIABILITY

THE LAW is settled that any theatre owner who accepts benefits from a contract without complaining before receiving such benefits is bound to fulfill the obligations assumed under the contract.

Case:

For example, in Wolff v. Alexander Film Company (56 S. W. [2d] 424), it was disclosed that the owner of the Siegel theatre entered into a contract with a film company by the terms of which it was agreed that the latter should receive payment of $10 a month for supplying certain advertising films. At the end of several months the Siegel theatre was closed and reopened under the name of the Ritz Theatre. The Ritz theatre continued for several months to exhibit the advertising films at the end of which period the film company filed suit against the Ritz theatre to recover the amount due on the films.

It was contended by the owner of the Ritz theatre that he was not liable because he had made no contract with the film company and that the contract, which originally had been made with the Siegel theatre, automatically was terminated when the Siegel theatre was closed.

Decision:

However, since the evidence indicated that the owner of the Ritz theatre had accepted benefits deriving from exhibiting the films, without complaining to the film company, the court held the latter entitled to a recovery, and said:

"Assuming, without deciding, that the closing of the Siegel theatre did terminate the contract . . . the evidence shows that, after the opening of the Ritz theatre appellee arranged with Mr. Baradel (film company) to screen the same film service for $7.50 per month, a cost to appellant of $2.50 per month less than was to have been paid to the Siegel, and that appellant was immediately notified of such arrangement and made no objection thereto. The films were thereafter exhibited at the Ritz with his knowledge and without objection, and it is admitted that he made at least one payment to the Ritz."

OUT-OF-STATE FIRMS MAY NOT BE ABLE TO SUE

MANY STATE legislatures have enacted laws which require corporations located in another state to file certain papers, or obtain a permit to do business in the foreign state, otherwise such foreign corporation may not file suit and obtain judgment against a debtor. It would be well for theatre operators to look up the law in their own states regarding this matter, which was involved in the recent case of Ligon v. Alexander Film Company (55 S. W. [2d] 1030).

Case:

The facts of this case are that an advertising film company is a Colorado corporation and conducts a studio there for the manufacture of moving picture films containing advertising matter relating to the business of its customers. The company has never filed in the office of the secretary of state of Texas its articles of incorporation, or obtained a permit to transact business in Texas, as provided by the laws of that state. Another law of Texas provides that corporations which do not comply with the above mentioned law are not entitled to file suit in the state against a debtor.

A merchant named Ligon entered into a contract with the Alexander Film Company which provided: "The undersigned advertiser (Ligon) subscribes for film advertising service and authorizes the Alexander Film Company, of Colorado Springs, Colo., to display catalog films for a period of 52 weeks," in the Palace and Lindsey theatres.

After a considerable period the film company filed suit against Ligon to collect $455 due for use of films which were exhibited in the theatre. Ligon refused to pay the bill and contended that the film company was not privileged to file suit against him in the state of Texas for the reason that it had failed to comply with the above mentioned Texas state law.

It is well known that a corporation located in one state may transact interstate business, such as sending a salesman into the state for the purpose of taking orders for merchandise which is shipped from another state, without necessity of complying with state laws. Therefore, the important consideration in this case was whether or not the transaction between the film company and Ligon was intrastate or interstate. In holding the transaction to be intrastate, whereby the film company was not privileged to file suit the court said:

Decision:

"The transaction between the film company and Ligon (advertiser) contemplated the doing of nothing by the company except to manufacture the films according to contract requirements and to ship them to the theatres for the use and benefit of Ligon. . . . The matter of publicly exhibiting the films was essentially intrastate business. . . . The circumstance that interstate commerce was involved in the manufacture and shipment of the films does not alter the intrastate character of the public exhibition of the advertising matter contained in the films."

Our projection room is rather small, 8 x 9 feet, due to the shortage of space, but we have room for two Powers 6-B projectors and a stereopticon, in addition to necessary accessories. Sound equipment is Mellaphone sound-on-film, with Webster amplification. We also have a non-sync machine. The projection room, of course, is of fireproof construction. Projection lighting is Mazda, using General Electric 900-watt, 30-ampere, 30-volt lamps. We get a very brilliant picture. The screen is Walker, and our single speaker is by Wright-DeCoster.

At the right of the screen area is a grille for ventilation by means of outdoor intakes and a blower.

We do not claim, of course, to have an elaborate theatre, but we believe it interesting to many country town exhibitors who, like myself, have to work with limited capital. We feel that many small town exhibitors would do a better business if they would dress up their theatres and really give their patrons an attractive place in which to get their motion picture entertainment.

Among Contributors to This Issue:

¶ Jack Knight (The Common Sense of Maintenance) is engineer in charge of maintenance of Paramount Publix theatres. His connection with the maintenance of theatre properties began many years ago, and except for a short period in which he was in charge of the maintenance of a group of large office buildings, his association with the motion picture theatre has continued ever since. He was maintenance engineer for Balaban & Katz during the development of that pioneering circuit, before it became a part of the great Publix organization. Much of the development of modern method in theatre maintenance has been under his supervision. Mr. Knight is scheduled to write an indefinite number of articles on maintenance for Better Theatres. With the first one in this issue he introduces his approach to the problems involved, especially in the light of new conditions today. With each following discussion he plans to go more and more deeply into the seasonal and daily functions of maintenance devolving upon theatre management and its staff.

¶ Ben Schlanger (Use of the Full Screen Area Today) is a New York architect who has been a frequent contributor to Better Theatres because of his special studies in the motion picture as related to exhibition. He will be remembered as creator of the parabolic reversed floor slope. His present studies in cinematographic methods with respect to the allocation of principal action are being conducted to determine the extent to which use of the outer portions of the screen pictorially would force definite changes in present practices in theatre designing, in order to assure proper vision. In one more article he plans to present his findings in further investigations of action distribution.

¶ Leo T Parker (Theatre Law in New Court Decisions) is a regular contributor to Better Theatres on legal developments of special interest to theatre owners and managers. He is an attorney-at-law with offices in Cincinnati.

¶ S. K. Wolf (What Can Acoustic Tests Tell Today?) is an acoustics engineer attached to Electrical Research Products, where he heads the acoustics department. He has contributed to Better Theatres on several previous occasions concerning acoustics of the motion picture theatre.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer publicly acknowledges its gratitude to the heroic company of men and women filming "ESKIMO" under the guidance of Director W. S. Van Dyke. "Thank God, they're safely back!" They fearlessly braved the dangers of the Arctic for more than a year. Their names will be immortally inscribed in the annals of picture-making. "ESKIMO" is destined to be M-G-M's Biggest since "Trader Horn."

"ESKIMO" is only one of the Giant Attractions in production at M-G-M. You will hear plenty about "DINNER AT EIGHT" and "NIGHT FLIGHT." In the amazing activity of the M-G-M studio right now there are engaged more great box-office stars, more celebrated producers and directors than have ever before been concentrated in the making of M-G-M pictures.

HITLER UBER ALLES

A RADIANT example of what happens when politics and government take command of any of the arts of expression is lucidly set forth in an article from Motion Picture Herald's Washington bureau on the Nazi "reorganization" of the German motion picture industry.

In view of the current considerations and discussion of various expedients of governmental control in this among other industries in the United States, this report on the unhappy today in Germany is of most special importance. This is incidentally the first coherent and authoritative report to come out of Germany about this amazing drastic application of the Nazi idea to the screen.

It seems clear that in Germany motion picture is to find itself in very much the same position as Russia. And the world knows that in Russia today the motion picture is not entertainment, but solely an instrument of propaganda and education—education of the sort which is also propaganda.

Russia, Italy and now Germany have taken over the motion picture substantially as an organ of government. And, it is reasonable to surmise that this, too, is to be measured as one of the consequences of the coming of sound. Talking pictures talk a language and languages are full of words that politicians like to say and have said.

STAGE GOES A-SUMMERING

DECORATION DAY has flung past in the exuberance of spring, and the annual flight of the fortunate to the mountains, the lakes and the seasides has begun, taking a considerable fraction of the spenders for amusement away from the urban exhibitors.

Some day when it becomes commercially more interesting to make motion pictures for something less than the grand average and the whole cross-section of everybody's taste, the screen will find it interesting and profitable to do something about serving this resort and vacation market in a more definitely organized manner than is applied now.

This vacationland audience is as special an audience as that which comes from out of town to visit Broadway, or the audience of that river of transients which flows along the Atlantic City Boardwalk. The vacation country audience is likely to be found considerably more female and more completely adolescent than the metropolitan audience.

Just now this audience is being served most importantly by the summer stage. This week and next, summer theatres are opening all along the Atlantic Coast from White Plains, on the lower fringe of New England 'way up into the piny depths of Maine. High class talent, due to the ills of the city stage, is available at figures which used to be paid for mine-run summer stock players. Many a new play will get its try-out among these summer theatres, and from them more than likely will come picture material for another season. Meanwhile, the resort region exhibitors will in many instances find increased competition this summer.

SIX THOUSAND STRONG

MOTION Picture Almanac for 1933, out this week, after a year of diligent reconstruction and labor by the editorial staffs of the several Quigley Publications in the film industry, presents the most complete "who's who" of the screen ever published, listing no less than six thousand names, including players, executives and all manner of workers in production, distribution and exhibition. The Almanac has become definitely an institution of the industry and an established reference volume to the related trade, and to the press. Its circulation is international.

This year's volume, of more than 800 pages, has been made to conform to standard reference book size for convenience, and appears in a smart binding of Motion Picture Herald's colors, orange and black, in, we hope, not too delicate a tribute to the large share that the staff of the Herald had in its making.

The issuance of the Almanac at this period is timed to the real end of the motion picture year and the beginning of the next. A very considerable record value attaches to the current volume becaue of the large number of structural changes of the past twelve months. And, like the dictionary, you can read it a piece at a time.

FOR "RESTRAINT"

COMING along right after reading last week's comment by Mr. R. B. Wilby, of Atlanta on the wasteful nature of the motion picture's distibution system and related abuses, and some of the remarks of Mr. Fred C. Meyer, of Milwaukee, on the text of "Thou shalt not ruin," there is added and corroborative significance in some of Mr. Harold B. Franklin's "Personal Talk" in the current RKO house organ.

Discussing the Industrial Control bill, Mr. Franklin finds it to offer unusual promise, saying:

"Here lies an opportunity for coordination and the elimination of waste. We must go forward, however, with well considered steps, having in mind the welfare of the industry as a whole. . . . The situation calls for men with the strongest characters and best abilities. Their catchwords should be 'restraint and self-control.' If the industry fails in its responsibility in carrying out a constructive policy—then we may expect permanent government supervision and regulation."

Publicity Blast

by TERRY RAMSAYE

ARRIVING WITH NEAT COINCIDENCE in the very week when the motion picture is engaged in seeking to set itself commercially in order in adjustment to code requirements of the Industrial Control bill, the loudest blast of external criticism from high places in the history of the screen has come with the publicity attendant upon the publication of the "report" from the Motion Picture Research Council.

The Motion Picture Research Council, Incorporated, however it may be officially and legally constituted, is in essence built about and motivated by its director, the Reverend William Harrison Short, a man of many causes, great diligence, and, one would gather, considerable belligerency.

The Reverend Mr. Short's technique, and perhaps purposes, differ markedly from those who have conspicuously gone before in the field of making moralistic and social excitement over the motion picture, remembering the while the Reverend Wilbur Crafts, and Canon William Sheafe Chase. In the Short campaign there is recognition of the new respect for science, for the laboratory and the authority of research. They have been brought to serve, but they have not yet precisely been brought to light that all may see.

THE "REPORT," WHICH IS TO SAY THE volume this week published by the august house of Macmillan, entitled "Our Movie-Made Children" and by Henry James Forman, is of course the immediate publicity focus of the current excitement in the press. It is Mr. Forman's alleged endeavor to summarize and popularize the material embodied in the nine ponderous volumes of the findings of the research experts and assorted scientists employed by the Motion Picture Research Council, yet to be published, maybe this autumn.

One may only conjecture what the nine volumes contain, since Mr. Forman's book conveys, at least to some readers, an atmospheric quality of being a new edition of or rather successor to the Reverend Mr. Short's pamphlet of 1927 entitled: "A Generation of Motion Pictures." This latter document was rejected by the committee on intellectual cooperation of the League of Nations, when offered as an official American report, according to contemporary accounts of matters at Geneva. This "A Generation of Motion Pictures" became the leverage of attention which led up to the formation of the Motion Picture Research Council. The Forman book is taken to be likely of application to like furtherance of the movement concerned.

The press seems to have found in Mr. Forman's book only two impressive sequences, one devoted to the fact that children kept up late and excited by a thriller toss in their sleep, another that some bad boy said he got a notion about being a gunman from "Little Caesar." That would seem to be rather less than usual provocation for a book.

The direct utterances of the book and its publicity releases are, however, of considerably less importance than other consequences. The immediate result has been to make the United States suddenly newly conscious of the motion picture in a critical sense and to stir up a storm of discussion that is likely to continue for many and many a week.

MOST CHALLENGING OF ALL IS AN editorial outgiving from William Randolph Hearst in which he ventures, while not entirely approving censorships, a suggestion for Federal censorship—and at this most timely, or untimely, occasion when the industry has to go to Washington and the politicians with a code of business practice.

Mr. Hearst, sitting in the peace and calm of La Cuesta Encantada on his vast baronial domain of San Simeon, is one of the most earnest students of the motion picture. Nightly he screens the product of the Hollywood studios, often before the first print has gone out for preview. And with his interest in production, he has had, it is said, not a little concern about the choice of material, about dialogue and all elements pertaining to the pictures in which his star, Miss Marion Davies, appears.

UNFORTUNATELY, MR. HEARST PLAINly does not see that all is well in the cultural and moral status of the motion picture, and he says so. He, among those who may be considered a part of the industry, is not however alone. In ensuing columns we present a letter to Motion Picture Herald from George P. Skouras, reflecting his sharp criticism of the level of recent product, from his personal observations and those of the managers of the some three hundred and odd theatres under Skouras administration.

This will all be found of special interest to the very large array of exhibitors in the lesser houses that represent so much of America. Week by week their discontent with what we have come to casually label "sophistication" is reported in their communications to Motion Picture Herald's widely read department entitled "What the Picture Did for Me."

Now the press is ringing with comment based on the Reverend Mr. Short's publicity coup, with the city papers inclined to be a bit skeptical in the main, with the journals of the lesser towns tending to view and discuss the screen with new alarm.

AND THAT REMINDS ONE SOMEWHAT of the ancient and interminable war between the city and the country, variously expressed down through history from the days of the glory of Athens to today. We have it now in the motion picture, with an increasing sharpness of definition. The vociferous discontents of the exhibitors of the lesser centers anent the product of today arise no little because of the period of chain domination which led to the making of product to please the buyers who sat on Broadway and who then dictated by purchasing power. The big town vote and the Broadway buyer in this period of decentralization have lost mightily in power, but one can wonder if word of this has really got to Hollywood yet. Of course, Will H. Hays told Hollywood about it, as recorded in Motion Picture Herald of April 29, reporting his discussions of the "dirt road."

Meanwhile there is likely to be a counterblast of publicity in the Motion Picture Research Council report matter. It is being whispered about that some of the scientists employed to make various investigations are increasingly displeased with the presentations that have been made of fractions of their material, which do not in their opinion scientifically report their whole job.

All of which means that the motion picture is in for a season of publicity which is not entirely box office.

THE RESEARCHERS—AND REACTIONS

Film Disquieting to the Children, Researchers Hold

Contemporary motion pictures have a definitely disquieting effect upon the minds, habits and actions of almost 28,000,000 boys and girls under the age of 21 who attend pictures regularly each week. This conclusion is reached, and disclosed in a report, by the Motion Picture Research Council. Love, Crime and Sex, the socalled "Big Three" of films, occupy a total of 72 per cent of all themes, each occupying, respectively, 29.6, 27.4 and 15 per cent in 1930.

The report, shortly to be published in nine volumes by the Macmillan company, is the result of an investigation carried on over a period of four years in various sections of the nation. The findings have been made by 20 psychologists and sociologists, members of the Payne Fund's Educational Research Committee, who were drafted from the Universities of Chicago, Ohio State, New York and Yale and Pennsylvania State College. The Payne fund was created in 1927 by Mrs. Chester C. Bolton, Cleveland philanthropist, to commemorate her grandfather, the late United States Senator Henry B. Payne, who once expressed a desire to do something toward "building of character in children." Already more than $200,000 has been spent by the Motion Picture Research Council, of which the late John Grier Hibben, president emeritus of Princeton, was chairman.

Powerful Medium: Hibben

The late Dr. Hibben said in his report to the council, after reading the conclusions of Dr. W. W. Charters, professor of educational research at Ohio State, who wrote an introductory indorsement to a tenth volume bearing on the report and written by Henry James Forman, that "on the basis of the research findings the scientists conclude that the motion picture is powerful to an unexpected degree in affecting the information, attitudes, emotional experiences and conduct patterns of children."

"What children see at the movies they retain in memory to an entirely unexpected degree," Dr. Hibben continued. "The second and third grade children at the end of six weeks remember 90 per cent of what they knew on the day following the show. Three months after seeing the picture they remember as much as they did six weeks after seeing it."

Declare Films in Conflict

It was further stated in Dr. Hibben's report that in view of these and similar facts discovered by the research committee concerning the effectiveness of the film as an instrument with which to read the child's mind and emotions, the content of the pictures becomes a matter of deep concern to parents.

The researchers conclude that in large part current films do conflict with the teachings and standards of the church, the home and the classroom, and quotes the "Big Three" aforementioned. Many a delinquent girl examined in an institution or a juvenile court testified that motion pictures were the cause of landing her in trouble, the report asserts, and many a young criminal and delinquent in penal or reformatory institutions declared that movies were responsible for starting him in "the racket."

"Our Movie Made Children," the title of the tenth volume, which appeared this week, also states that current commercial motion pictures present a critical and complicated situation, in which the deep interest, keen intelligence and sincere cooperation of producers, parents and public are needed to

Mr. MILLIKEN observes:

"I am sure that we and the whole motion picture industry will be much interested in seeing what the findings of the scientists and experts employed by the Motion Picture Research Council may contain and disclose that may be of value to the well being and development of the art," observed Carl E. Milliken of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc.

"We are meanwhile confronted by a somewhat peculiar method of presentation. The deductions and arguments based, one is to presume, upon all or some part of the findings of the research scientists, are being presented now, but the evidence, the findings themselves, are far from available for our examination.

"There is not, even in this prepresented set of conclusions from what may be the evidence, in my opinion anything that is new or especially significant in what has been disclosed. Mothers generally are somewhat aware of the reactions of children to the stimuli and excitements of various forms of entertainment."

Save the screen from degeneracy, is Hearst's plea

Sunday and Monday the motion picture world sat up rubbing its eyes and looking again at the New York American—and other Hearst papers—on the discovery of an editorial by William Randolph Hearst, inspired by the Motion Picture Research Council's report, and more than tentatively considering a national censorship as a desirable expedient of industry control. It may be observed parenthetically that when copy is signed by Mr. Hearst it is also written by Mr. Hearst. In view of the ghost writing which has for years appeared in his newspapers, the fact that no ghosting is ever done by him is not generally appreciated. Mr. Hearst's editorial as presented in the New York American, under the heading "The Effect of Moving Pictures on Public Morals," follows:

"The report of the motion picture research council reflects an extremely conscientious effort to solve the moral and social problems of the moving picture and to direct this enormously influential factor into directions of greatest good to the community.

"The powerful formative effect of moving pictures upon the character and mental conceptions of children is thoughtfully considered.

"But in this discussion it must fully be realized that moving pictures have developed beyond the point when they were made chiefly for the entertainment and patronage of the young. The moving picture, like the stage, today addresses itself to the adult.

"If parents want to take their children to a moving picture they should make inquiry beforehand as to whether the picture is suitable for children.

"They would do this much in every instance with regard to a theatrical play; they would be similarly careful about the character of a book they might give their children to read.

"They should be as discriminating with regard to the screen.

"In some cities like Chicago the censors themselves designate certain pictures as fit for children and others as fit only for adults.

"But it is undoubtedly better for parents to take the trouble to make their own decisions on such matters and surely to consider carefully the character of the pictures they want their children to see.

"However, apart from the vital question of what the child should see, there is the equally vital question of what the adult should see and should properly enjoy and encourage.

"Sad to say, there has been a certain

SHIFTED SENTIMENT

Sterner, more stringent have become judicial authorities of Toronto, in Canada, where theatre picketing is concerned. Tolerantly had the courts previously looked upon the parade of the persuaders, but last week, indicative of the shifted sentiment, one William H. MacConnell, member of the International Operators Union, was fined $100 (alternative: 3 months in jail) for unlawful picketing, by Judge Lee. Plea of annoyed exhibitors: they already use union projectionists, members of the new All-Canadian Labor Union. Leading the exhibitors in the picketing protest is W. A. Baillie, Cum Bac theatre owner, before whose house MacConnell had marched. When operators directed activities against members of Allied Exhibitors of Toronto, of which Baillie is secretary, his retaliation was court action for stench bombing, loss of business. . . .

EDITOR'S MEDIUM

To a new medium, for him, will go David Lawrence, able editor of the weekly United States News, offspring of United States Daily, and equally popular commentator on affairs of government via radio. Planned by him is a series of one-reel subjects graphically explaining President Roosevelt's "new deal." Noting a voracious appetite on the part of the public at large for news of Washington, with the nation definitely "Washington-minded," Editor Lawrence foresees popular interest in his screen series, designed for commercial distribution. To "the present popular interest in economics" he attributes "the universal interest in money." . . .

JURORS' PETITION

In a Houston courtroom several months ago a jury brought in a verdict of guilty, and Will Horwitz, notable Texas independent theatre owner, was sentenced to jail for a year-and-a-day for operating a lottery from his radio station, XED, Reynosa, Mexico, permitting U. S. citizens to risk their dollars. Last week from the Supreme Court came a denial of a review of the case, and immediately came a rally of friends and the press. Editorially the Houston Press hoped a petition to President Roosevelt would be effective, while among the 75,000 Houston residents signing the petition were 10 of the 12 jurors who several months ago said guilty in the case of the U. S. vs. Will Horwitz. . . .

NO RETALIATION

Not retaliatory against foreign countries, declare officials of powerful Actors Equity Association, is the constitutional amendment adopted at last week's annual meeting in New York, requiring alien players become citizens for eligibility as resident members. Imposing "limitation commensurate with that imposed upon American actors playing in Europe," was President Frank Gillmore's recent explanation of the amendment. Defeated was a proposed amendment to permit legitimate performances on Sunday, in exchange for another day in the week. Sacred still to the actor is his Sunday off. To members of the chorus will hereafter go increased remuneration for broadcasting and appearing in television or talking or silent pictures, decided the Chorus Equity Association, also meeting last week in New York. . . .

NOT EMPTY WORDS

"I will not be satisfied until I can restore to my fellow-investors in Shubert Theatre Corporation a substantial part, if not all, of what they have lost," this week declared Lee Shubert, president of Select Theatres, corporation which recently purchased, at auction for $400,000, the assets of the bankrupt, once great Shubert theatre company. Proving his words not empty, Mr. Shubert announced one-half of the issued common stock of Select, allotted to him, will be turned over to owners of debentures, creditors, stockholders of Shubert Corporation without cost. Thus may they salvage something. To such salvage for others, and the Shubert enterprise, Lee Shubert plans "to devote the remaining years of my life." . . .

INDELIBLE RECORD

Silently, unobtrusively, firmly anchored to a concrete base set high above the tremendous beehive of activity, rests a motion picture camera, recording in indelible celluloid the construction of the great reclamation project which is Colorado's Boulder Dam, there to remain until its completion some three years hence. The five-year effort, costing $70,000,000, thus will become virtually an engineering textbook via the cinematic record, which will be reduced to a motion picture running probably less than one hour. Each day, under the supervision of B. D. Glaha, chief photographer of the project, a few feet of film are exposed, later to be a graphic history of an engineering feat. . . .

TYRANTS—AND UNIFORMS

"Defamatory to Mexico" is the cinematic dressing of tyrants of an earlier revolutionary era in uniforms of the Mexican soldier of today, last week in effect declared present President Abelardo Rodríguez, by executive order suppressing "Prisoner 13," Mexican film, shown only three days, and concerning the reign of terror which accompanied the counter-revolutionary dictatorship of then President Victoriano Huerta. Prompting the order was the inadvertent clothing, by the director, of his "tyrant soldiers" in modern officers' and soldiers' uniforms. Director Fernando de Funtes promises re-dressing of his players in re-makes. . . .

BY EMBASSY REQUEST

Amazed, perturbed this week were Paramount officials to learn of the sudden prohibition, by the Brazilian foreign office, in Rio de Janeiro, of their cinematic version of Ernest Hemingway's notable "A Farewell to Arms," throughout the country at the request of the Italian Embassy. Therein is a re-echo of last year's controversy, when the film was shown at the Italian Embassy in Washington, after word of impending protest if the famed World War Italian retreat from Piave were emphasized in the film as in the book. "Harmless," was the verdict on the picture then rendered by Embassy officials, yet strangely, the film has never been shown in Italy. . . .

SARTORIAL ASSETS

A blue coat, white flannels, a blue shirt with tie to match—were last week in Chicago the total assets of onetime screen hero Francis X. Bushman. With a petition listing a debt total of $107,084, Mr. Bushman was declared bankrupt at a hearing before Federal Referee Garfield Charles, claiming his clothes his only asset. In Referee Charles' mind was apparently no thought of confiscating the tangible assets of actor Bushman. . . .

NAZIS FINALLY TAKE OVER GERMAN FILM INDUSTRY REORGANIZATION

Hitler Plans To Make Screen a Medium of Propaganda—Industry To Have Little To Say in Drastic New System

[Washington Bureau of the Herald]

Absolute control by Adolph Hitler's Nazis of all factions and factors in and of the German motion picture industry is about to become a fact. It is his hope that government control will serve not only as a sorely needed "hypodermic" for a withering industry, but will also result in immediately establishing the film as an important means of propagating German culture, much in the same manner as Russia's productions, prepared under Soviet control, are used throughout the world as propaganda.

The motion picture industry evidently now has, or eventually will have little to say in the application of the plan to control German films, which in its scope is as drastic as any imposed on any nation's industry. The wide influence of the screen is the basic factor which is prompting the Nazis to exercise control. Some of the highlights of the control plan are:

Reorganization of every branch of the German film industry.

Complete subsidization and stabilization, creatively, financially and otherwise.

Creation of sufficient product for German theatres.

Establishment of a distribution trust.

Institution of a film financing bank.

Compulsory adherence of every trade member to the plan, under penalties.

Establishment of an arbitration board for all disputes, in all branches.

Boycotting of exhibitors violating rental or contractual agreements.

Control of admission scales and theatre policies is vested in distribution trust.

Trust given power to control the business of any distributor member, at his expense.

Termination of picture cycles.

Control of quality and quantity of product vested in central organization.

Reduction in production, distribution and exhibition overhead; salaries included.

Scenario, story and cast must be all-German, including films for export. Imported films of Germans who migrated to Hollywood or elsewhere will probably be banned.

Theatres, producers and film executives will probably be licensed.

New quota law for foreign films will control imports.

Few anticipated that the Hitler control would be as all-embracing. Extremely strict censorship already is in order.

"Spio," the chief trade association in Berlin, is being used to effect the change, which will be supervised rigidly by the "Fighting Union for German Culture" (propaganda section of the German party). A working committee in charge of evolving the plan includes Herr Schmidy (Engels and Schmidt Co.); Bavarian production, Herr Berloger; distribution, both domestic and foreign, Herr Mulleneisen; studios and production, Herr Pfitzner, who was named chairman; theatres, Herr Engel; industry and general, Herr Bolten-Baeckers.

The committee was ordered to establish and maintain contact with the Tobis Commission, and with representatives of the ministry, the Nazi party and of the NSBO (Nazi Film Labor Union). All will act as advisors.

A special Spio press department was instituted, with Dr. Luitpold Nusser, chief editor of the Film-Kurier, German trade publication, in charge. Herr Cremer heads a division which will be in charge of preliminary control of scenarios and casts. The Central Political Commission of the Nazi party will have a direct hand in hiring and firing.

Receipts Drop 40 Per Cent

Motion pictures represent one of the main spheres of interest and influence of the New Reich Propaganda Minister, Dr. Joseph Goebbels. Radio and the press are others. Some indication of the importance of the motion picture industry in German economics, to say nothing of its possibilities as a propaganda medium, might be gleaned from these facts, which were made known in March when government control of films was first discussed officially:

Capital invested in production was estimated at 36,000,000 to 40,000,000 marks, compared with an annual total of 28,000,000 to 30,000,000 marks in amusement and turnover taxes imposed on this capital. Five thousand film theatres represented a value of about 1,000,000,000 marks, according to the last official estimates. In the last two years the receipts of these theatres have dropped as much as 40 per cent. The steady decrease in the number of patrons, due to the general shrinkage of incomes, has led to an enormous oversupply of theatre seats as well as a sharp drop in the average price of admission.

The entire German motion picture industry is marking time since the political disorders and pending the actual adoption of the plan. While American companies having branches in Berlin have given no indication as to what action they will take, there have been reports that some offices may be abandoned.

The newly established financing company will have nominal capital of 200,000 marks ($47,600), but credit pledges to the amount of 10,000,000 marks ($2,380,000) have been offered in its behalf. Backing this film bank are not only the leading motion picture corporations of the country, but such outstanding banks as the Reichscredit Gesellschaft, the Deutschebank under Disconto Gesellschaft, the Dresdener Bank and the Commerce und Privatbank. The government will officially be represented on the film bank's board by Walter Funk, Nazi press chief.

Would Revise Admissions

Coincidentally, there came from Berlin last week to the New York press the details of a new Reich order, in which American companies will be concerned, and which places further restrictions on the existing embargo on the transfer of funds, securities and gold and other precious metals from Germany. The right of search was extended to tourists and their baggage and to all shipments out of Germany, whether by mail, railroad, ship or airplane. Postal authorities were authorized to open all letters and packages to ascertain that they do not contain valuable contraband. Violations are subject to heavy fines or 10 years' imprisonment.

The first phase of the industry Spio plan consists of an endeavor to provide German cinemas with a sufficient supply of box-office product on the theory that even under present circumstances good films bring in good revenues. The drop in cinema attendance, it is hoped, should be overcome by the quality rather than the quantity of the product shown. Admission prices should be adapted to the present purchasing power of the public, its sponsors hold, taking into account the different conditions in the various German provinces and territories without these prices being forced down to an abnormally low level, merely for competitive purposes. Exhibitors should have a sound enough feeling of responsibility in figuring out the rentals to be paid on percentage contracts to producers or distributors so as to permit of their calculations as exactly as possible. In order to put these principles into practice, the Spio plan provides to establish the Verleih Treuhand G. m. b. H. (Distribution Trust Company).

Film Financing Bank

The second phase of the plan provides for the institution of a film financing bank, the purpose of which will be, in cooperation with exhibitors and the distribution trust, to arrange for a continuous and regular film production in order to furnish a sufficient and regular supply of quality product to cover exhibitor requirements. Film production will also be controlled so as to prevent a simultaneous appearance on the market of films of similar subjects and the drop of receipts which might result from such duplication of theme and type of motion picture.

It appears from conferences had with several leading banks that it will be easy to obtain the necessary credits at normal conditions if and when the motion picture theatres, which henceforth are expected to assume their share of responsibility for the success of the production capital invested, will be rationally exploited. Production expenditures are to be submitted to a severe control and reduced to a minimum to fit into present conditions in each case where this is required in the interests of all concerned.

Further Restrictions Are Placed Upon Transfer of Funds and Metals—Production Costs To Be Reduced to a Minimum

DREISER HAS NO OBJECTION

Willing to be shown, Theodore Dreiser, who last year sought an injunction against Paramount restraining release of its picturization of his "An American Tragedy," this week came, saw and approved Paramount's version of his "Jennie Gerhardt." Mr. Dreiser, in fact, has no objection to the public seeing the film, for he said: "I have no objection to the public seeing 'Jennie Gerhardt.' It is an excellent improvisation upon my theme, and is very moving. I noticed several people in the projection room weeping during some of the scenes." He incidentally took the opportunity to deplore the physical limitations of the screen and, not too hopefully, remarked: "I would like some day to see a book interpreted on the screen exactly as it was written. . . . But audiences wouldn't care to sit still that long, and it would cost too much to make."

DIGEST OF HITLER FILM CONTROL PLAN

Reorganization of Distribution.—Section A of the plan deals with the creation of Distribution Trust Company. Fifty-one per cent of its shares is to be placed in the hands of the A. D. F. (German Distributors' Organization) and the remaining shares are to be distributed among the distributor members of the A. D. F. Each distributor who is or becomes a member of the A. D. F. is to be allotted a 100-mark share for each film distributed during the past season.

The Distribution Trust Company will be financed as follows:

The A. D. F. will conclude a contract with the trust, according to which the former undertakes to place at the disposal of the Distribution Trust Company the capital required. The fulfillment of this obligation is to be guaranteed by a preliminary contract. The necessary monies will be supplied to the A. D. F. by the Spio.

The statutes of the Distribution Trust Company specify that the purpose of the enterprise is the establishing of a definite program for film distribution and the control of the execution of this program. Every member of the organization is expected to adhere to this program. The company is entitled at any time and at the expense of the respective distributor member to control the state of his business. Penalties can be decided upon by general meeting of members. In case of breach of contract, the company is authorized to claim damages.

The company conducts its business in its own name but for the account and in the interests of its members. It is supposed to protect their interests without any prejudice to the other branches of the film industry. No profits are expected.

The internal organization of the company provide for the institution of an arbitrage for the settlement of conflicts. The chief purpose of the provisions is to bind distributor members to solidarity and loyalty in observing contracts.

Section B deals with the relationship between distributors and exhibitors. It provides, among other things, for the boycott of all distributor members or exhibitors that do not fulfill obligations or that commit a breach of rental contract. The Distribution Trust Company will handle the control of minimum admission prices, as agreed upon, and also the control of a regular settlement of rentals. The film booking conditions as outlined in the plan provide for the institution of an arbitrage court also for the settlement of conflicts between exhibitors and distributors. The activities of this abritrage court are specifically outlined in the plan.

Financing of Production.—Section C contains the statutes of the so-called Film Financing Bank. Those companies will be considered as its founders and shareholders that assume the guaranty against the non-payment of bills accepted by the bank. These will be the raw film manufacturers, studio owners, laboratories, and other suppliers of the film industry.

The film financing bank is to be instituted in the form of a joint stock company with a capital of 200,000 marks. The shares are provided with dividend coupons. The shareholders get four per cent of the profits, with the remainder being applied to various purposes, among other things to cover the losses resulting from guaranties assumed by its members.

Section D outlines the business methods to be applied by the film financing bank. They are as follows:

The film manufacturer who requires a certain credit for a planned film production will sign bills for the amount required, plus a 15 per cent margin covering eventual overhead expenses, and deliver them to the film financing bank. The latter, after providing the bills in question with its acceptance, will have them discounted at a discount bank. The proceeds of the operation are to be applied to the production of the film and the manufacturing of the number of positive copies required for domestic distribution. The discount is effected according to the financial needs of the production involved. The companies that supply the raw material, studio space, etc. (raw film manufacturers, studio owners, and laboratories) for the respective film productions assume the guaranty vis-a-vis the discounting bank against the non-payment of the bills accepted by the film financing bank.

The guaranty against non-payment is to be furnished to the discounting bank in a single amount; however, each of the warrantors assumes a certain share of the guaranty proportionately to the supplies he has furnised for the film production involved.

Further provisions specify the following:

When granting a credit it should be considered whether the production program to be financed contains a sufficient number of good "super" and average quality pictures. It should also be taken into consideration before turning out a certain category of films (adventures, detective stories, etc.) whether there are not already too many of such subjects on the market to make production of further films of the same nature a worthwhile proposition, especially taking into account foreign films imported. Film production programs should as much as possible be established along the lines determined by the Spio before March 31 of each year for the coming release season, in accordance with market requirements.

When financing film production, attention should be paid to a reasonable reduction of high salaries paid to stars, directors, cameramen, and other film workers. Financing of films, for the production of which the above conditions are not complied with, should be declined.

Financing Conditions of the Bank.—Film production may only be financed if the producer complies with the following conditions:

(1) At least 30 per cent of the production costs and the cost of copies for Geman distribution must be paid in cash; this 30 per cent may include those amounts that were paid for acquiring the subject of the scenario, the music, etc.

(2) The scenario ready for "shooting," together with a detailed estimate of production costs, must be submitted to the bank.

(3) The producer must furnish irrefutable proof that he legally acquired the authors' rights both for music and picture to be used for his film. If these rights were previously disposed of, either for mechanical music reproduction or to musical editors, this should be specified.

(4) The producer must submit to the bank the contract concluded with the distributor for domestic distribution. This distributor must be a member of the Distribution Trust Company.

(5) The producer must undertake to produce in the studios of.....and have the copies made in.....laboratory on.....raw film. The studio owners, laboratories and raw film manufacturers in question must be chosen among those that are considered as reliable warrantors by the discounting banks.

The bank is to get from the producer as many prorogation bills as are necessary to pemit three extensions of the bills in question, including the 15 per cent margin mentioned above. For "super" type films or for such films the release of which is delayed for some reason or other the extension possibility must be secured by issuing further prorogation bills.

Instructions to the Bank Management.—The amount of credit is not to be paid to the producer, but the bank will pay directly the bills and payment advices covering salaries and other services rendered in connection with the production involved, also for the film copies necessary for domestic distribution. Further details concerning the credits to be granted are left to the discretion of the management.

In compensation for the handling of credits and various operations connected therewith, as well as the control of credit contracts, the bank charges a minimum commission of 4 per cent if the credit amounts to 140,000 marks or less, and three per cent if the credit exceeds 140,000 marks.

In addition to this commission, the producer must pay all the discount fees. The bank is further entitled to charge up to an additional one-half per cent as its commission for the acceptance of bills.

Credit Guarantees.—The guarantees against non-payment of the bills accepted by the bank are secured as follows:

The management concludes agreements with the individual warrantors according to a determined contract form. No digression from that form is allowed without special approval of the board of directors. As soon as the producer has advised of and proved in what studio his film is to be produced, what laboratory will handle the copying, and what raw film is to be used, the bank will get in touch with the warrantors involved in order to ascertain whether they are willing to assume the guaranty or part of the guaranty against non-payment of accepted bills in connection with the film or the production program in question. The willingness of the warrantors to assume the guaranty must be ascertained at once in order to protect the producer from eventual losses.

The management of the bank will then get in touch with those leading banks that are to discount the bills and secure assurances that the bills accepted by the bank and guaranteed by the warrantors above mentioned will be discounted. The triple prorogation possibility must be mentioned in the assurance and the question be cleared as to which warrantors are agreeable to the discounting bank.

If and when the bank is unable to fulfill its obligations with regard to an accepted bill, i. e., when it has to recur to the warrantors, the board of directors must be immediately advised as well as the warrantors themselves.

The Spio plan also includes a form of financing contract between the bank and the film producer. This contract is very comprehensive and foresees various eventualities. The following paragraphs are of interest:

The producer is to pay to the bank all his returns from the exploitation of a film financed by the bank. Similar provisions are made in so far as distributors are concerned. A representative of the bank is to attend the film production operations. Foreign distribution licenses can only be given with the approval of the bank. The negative of the film to be produced is handed to the bank as its property. The distributor can obtain the copies required from the bank direct. The bank furnishes various guarantees covering eventual risks during the production or the exploitation of a film. The institution of an arbitrage court is provided for.

The above regulations have in view the insuring of a regular film production and distribution whenever possible without using the bank obligations. The Film Producing Bank reserves all rights and powers with a view to taking any measures and assuming any control it thinks fit to insure regular and rational production and distribution activities.

Scenario, Cast.—The scenario and music of films must be based on German spiritual work. All films, even if they are destined for foreign distribution, must be penetrated with German spirit and culture. Text and music should therefore be German and German artists must be employed. Motion picture theatres should be places of entertainment and pleasure, but at the same time they should not neglect their task of cultural influence. Any efforts toward new artistic forms in film production will be actively furthered. Star salaries will probably be limited to 25,000 marks per picture.

Sound.—The NSK Tobis (National Socialist Tobis Commission) has endeavored to insure that all future alleviations for sales conditions and prices be made retroactive as of April 1, 1933, and these endeavors have met with success. A more or less free choice of studios is provided for. A lowering of the Tobis royalties for the sound patents will be enforced to help reduce production costs.

Music Royalties.—The outstanding points will be satisfactorily settled by an amicable understanding removing possible hardship. No court actions will be started without previous warning against any German film enterprises, so long as there be any possibility of reaching an understanding by means of negotiations.

Studios.—Studios in Berlin and Munich are equipped and ready for renewed film production. The technical staff of these studios, in cooperation with the NSK Spio and the BSBO, will do their utmost to maintain and improve the high standard of German film production and nothing is to hinder production activities, such production to take place along more economical lines. No shifting of producers to foreign studios is permitted. There is the possibility in such cases that the producers will find it difficult to market in Germany their product made abroad.*

Film Production.—The German film producers are said to be willing to start work with the utmost energy under the protection of the national government and to produce films along the lines mentioned by Dr. Goebbels in his program speech. Existing production plans which could not for special reasons come to life in the past will now materialize. The uncertainty as to whether or not a scenario was fit for exhibition under present conditions, what persons could be employed in the cast or as scenario writers and composers are removed.

Distribution and Theatres.—Distributors, the most important link between producers and consumers (theatres), will concentrate their efforts on the marketing of good films at cheapest prices. Distribution expenses are to be reduced as much as possible and it is planned to concentrate distribution in the hands of a small number of distributing units. Sales and renting conditions will undergo a considerable change, and it is expected that exhibitors on their own initiative will take measures to remove the excess of seatage which is handicapping the existence of exhibitors.

*This, incidentally, is intended to discourage German directors and casts from working abroad; in other words, foreign-made films with either German producers, directors, or artists will find local censorship difficult. In France, this idea will, if it prevails, work counter to German-made films employing French producers, directors or casts.

Cullman Due to Hold Roxy Post

Because of the improvement shown in the operation of the original Roxy theatre, New York, during the past six months, it is expected that creditors will favor a continuance of the receivership under the guidance of Howard S. Cullman. There will be a hearing June 13 before Federal Judge Francis Caffey.

From December 15, when Mr. Cullman became receiver, up to and including May 4, the net operating loss was $4,489 before deducting rent, taxes, insurance and interest on receiver's certificates amounting to $59,-182. Since the original equity receivership was changed to a foreclosure receivership July 1, 1932, down to May 4, 1933, gross receipts have been $1,051,192. Operating expenses have been $1,147,515 and there is a total deficit of $274,959. Total assets are given as $9,597,773, and current liabilities are $539,032.

WARNINGS FROM TRADE AND PRESS

Hearst Calls For Federal Censoring

definite degeneracy in the stage of late years.

"And apparently there has been a corresponding degeneracy in literature.

"There is a tendency for this degeneracy to affect moving pictures, but apparently moving pictures have been kept in the main on a higher plane of morals than the stage or the average book of fiction.

"Perhaps this has been due to censorship, although it must be confessed that censorship as a rule has not been particularly conscientious or intelligent.

Prejudice in Censorship

"It operates generally by rule and routine on the one hand, or by personal prejudice on the other, and varies to such a degree in different States that moving picture producers hardly know what to do to satisfy the contradictory requirements of the censors; consequently producers are disposed very largely to make their pictures regardless of the censors and let the censors of each State mutilate the productions as their fancy dictates.

"The censorship would be much more effective for good if it were unified or at least harmonized—if there were perhaps Federal censorship or at least an agreement among the censor boards of the different States as to what was permissible in pictures and what objectionable.

"There must be a recognition of the obvious fact that a certain character of sex pictures and crime pictures are demoralizing, even if these pictures fail to violate the detail of rules and proscriptions made by the censor boards.

Asks Intelligent Censorship

A spirit of vulgarity or lewdness or licentiousness is sometimes much more demoralizing than an objectionable phrase or incident.

"The censors eliminate vigorously improper phrases and incidents and frequently many that are of little or no impropriety, but seldom take into consideration a pervading spirit of lewdness or vulgarity.

"What is required in the situation is not more censorship but more intelligent censorship, more thoughtful and judicious censorship, and in many cases more liberal censorship.

"Such more intelligent censorship would have a great amount of co-operation from the producers, who are discouraged from co-operation at present by the unjustifiable and sometimes inexplicable performances of some of the censorship boards.

"The screen should be saved from the degeneracy of the stage and of modern literature, because as an indisputable fact the screen is much more of an educational factor than either literature or the stage drama. . . .

"The maintenance of the screen as an uplifting rather than a debasing, influence should be undertaken entirely regardless of the fact that the screen may not now be regarded mainly as entertainment for children.

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST

"There is obviously no reason why adults should be demoralized.

"In fact, as far as consistent with interest and entertainment, the enormous educational value of the screen should be employed to improve the taste and culture and moral standard of the adult.

"There should be in the screen some of the sense of obligation to society that exists in the press.

"It should be one of the objects of the producers of high-class moving pictures to employ the enormous influence of the screen for purposes beneficial to the community.

"The argument is often heard that vulgar pictures and lewd pictures are made because the public demands them.

"This is not a good excuse, not even a good apology.

"There may be an element of the public which patronizes prurience and vulgarity, but the screen should appeal to the better element of the public and endeavor by the constant presentation of pictures of high quality and character and equally high entertainment value to educate the lower element of the public out of its debased tastes.

"Of course the box office must be considered . . . but careful analysis of box office receipts shows that many of the highest quality pictures with the noblest themes have been the best money makers.

"Granted that an easy way for some producers to make money is by prostituting the screen to prurient appeal, but moving pictures as a whole have reached such a position of dignity and importance in the community that the better producers should, and do, recognize this dignity and importance, and appreciate the obligation to society that this situation implies and imposes."

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST

"Reform or Be Caged": Skouras

George P. Skouras, vice president of Skouras Theatres Corporation, operating between three and four hundred theatres in the West and Midwest, moved by reflections on the Motion Picture Research Council's report, writing from his New York office, addresses the Herald, thus:

Today every newspaper in the country in prominent headlines is telling the public that the Motion Picture Research Council, after spending thousands of dollars investigating the influence of motion pictures on children's welfare, have found that the films injure the child morale. One of the papers has this heading in large letters: "Movie-going minor called worse behaved and less controlled emotionally." As a member of the industry, I would like to be in a position to deny this charge emphatically, but as man to man, are we in a position to deny it?

Last November, we set aside Friday night as "Children's Night," in the majority of our theatres, in order to re-establish the steady customers we once had, for if children become fans, then we can count on the women as well. At first the idea met with extreme enthusiasm, but unfortunately the producers did not give us enough pictures without the poisonous sting of sex sophistication and hard-boiled realism, to make it possible to properly book any theatre for two consecutive weeks.

Our industry today suffers not only from the influence of the sophistication of the legitimate stage, but from the influence of European perversion on the ideas of our American producers through their constant visits abroad. In addition, instead of carrying out programs planned in advance as to the number and quality of the pictures they are going to make, each studio spies on the other to see what they are doing and in their effort to imitate and beat them to it, they are filling our theatres with the same type of pictures in monotonous cycles.

We are still in the motion picture business and not the legitimate theatre, and we are appealing to children—even to our very nurseries. During the last six months each time I have visited any theatre, the managers have had a unanimous complaint—that some woman that same day had objected to the filthiness of the picture. Unfortunately, in spite of how our executives may feel on the matter, I can say sincerely that I agree with the woman.

It is my belief that a campaign should be started by all the organs of the industry to correct the situation before outer influences bring enough pressure to bear and put us within an invisible cage, gagged so our voices could not be heard no matter how we howled. If we should ever be in a position where we are dominated by politically appointed censors, God have mercy on us!

PRESS OPINIONS DIVIDE ON FINDINGS

Newspapers See Two Sides to It

Probably within the week every newspaper in America will have editorialized upon the Motion Picture Research Council's report. The trend to approve and support and the tendency to grinningly take up a defense of the status quo of the movies are about equally divided, with, as one might expect, the rural press having the less sympathy for the screen institution. Typical comment from papers in widely remote sections follows:

Newark Star-Eagle:

"Twenty phychologists and sociologists who have completed a four-year study of motion pictures under the auspices of the Motion Picture Research Council, have reached the conclusion that the movies exert a profound influence on the habits and behavior of children and are in conflict with the teachings of the school, home and church.

"This conclusion is in conflict with the results of two independent investigations completed recently in England, which vindicated the films."

Philadelphia Public Ledger:

"It would be absurd to insist that motion pictures must be made safe and suitable for children unless it be assumed that they are not intended for adult entertainment. But these studies may convince many conscientious parents of their own responsibilities."

Worcester (Mass.) Telegram:

". . . But the movie industry has a right to be free from these repeated inferences that it is under some sort of obligation to be a Pollyanna kindergarten." . . .

New Haven Courier-Times:

". . . It does not follow that films must be censored to fit the standard requisite for childhood. It does follow that attendance must be censored. To shape all pictures as mental food for infants would be to clip the wings of the most adequate modern Pegasus. But to shape some pictures thus would be sensible."

Staunton (Va.) News-Leader:

". . . There are other influences, of course, that exert a downward pull on character besides the movies, but there is none worse than that of the current screen. If the boy turns out to be an illicit thrill-hunting hooligan, or the girl a sex-saturated sophisticate, the parent is directly to blame. The parent who does not exercise care—extreme care, as matters now stand—is a bad citizen."

Richmond (Va.) Times-Dispatch:

". . . The movies have been with us a comparatively brief period of time, yet parents have been worrying hundreds of years about the character development of their children. It is scarcely possible for these researches to prove anything."

San Francisco Chronicle:

". . . It must have cost a great deal of money as well as prodigious labor to make and publish this report. Such an endowment would launch a picture making enterprise in concord with the views of the investigators which, if the conclusions were sound, would by force of competition and example gradually lead the whole industry into the same path."

Kansas City Journal-Post:

". . . When the average adolescent reads a novel or sees a movie he is fully aware that he is enjoying fiction and behaves accordingly. If he is not intelligent enough to realize this, there is little hope for him. Where would we be if every Sunday school student who was told about King Solomon grew up and strove to acquire a harem?"

"It's Spinach and the hell with it," says Daily News

The Daily News of New York, the original American tabloid, offspring of the Chicago Tribune, and belligerently and constantly on what it deems to be the side of the majority, takes a strong but unexcited point of view concerning the findings of the Motion Picture Research Council and their implications, in its last Sunday edition, under the caption, "Movies Attacked Again." Thus:

"A group of professors working for the Motion Picture Research Council (their chief was President John Grier Hibben of Princeton until he was killed in a motor accident at the age of 72) have surveyed and researched, labored and taken thought, and have found out nine volumes full of things about movies and children which everybody else already knew. College professors are moving rapidly into our Government, to which we don't much object; but we're dog-goned if we want to see college professors govern our movie life as well as our economic life. . . .

"On the morals and behavior score, there is the fact that child moviegoers like Westerns, known to the movie people as horse operas, better than any other type of film drama. Well, we have yet to see a horse opera in which virtue didn't win and vice bite the dust at the end. The same goes, in general, for the gangster pictures. Is there anything immoral about that? . . .

"We're afraid this latest attack on the movies is just another outcropping of that instinct for finding out what children (and grownups) like and then telling them it's bad for them and they mustn't touch. We say it's spinach and the hell with it."

Disquieting Effect On Child, Is Finding

discover how to use them to the best advantage in the development of children.

Under the "Big Three" classification of themes, the report states that Crime is the worst offender in its effect on child minds.

In 115 pictures selected at random in 1932, there were 59 that showed killing technique of a wide variety, the report says. The revolver was used in 22 films, knifing in nine, beating to death, drowning, lynching, machine-gunning, strangling and six other methods in less than five pictures each, making a total of 18 varieties of exits from this mortal earth and the film scene.

After noting other matter revealed as objectionable by the content analysis, the scientists conclude that "this is rather a sorry lay-out for the children to see when they go to the movies." They find that the films have a profound influence on youthful conduct, leading to delinquency and general crime.

In "Our Movie Made Children" Mr. Forman says:

"Children imitate movies in love-technique, flirtation, kissing, caressing, vamping and 'necking.'"

In a report of a comparison of children who do and those who do not attend pictures, the survey finds that "movie" children average lower in deportment records, and in school work are rated lower by their teachers, are less cooperative, less self-controlled, more deceptive and less emotionally stable.

Altogether about 3,000 children were tested in the memory studies, with 813,000 test films, and approximately the same number were tested for reactions and effects.

Clean as Any Industry, Says Kuykendall

Recording an interview with Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, Jack Ryan writes in the Memphis Press Scimitar:

"Kuykendall has some very definite ideas on the motion picture business that are well worth hearing. Here are some:

" 'Some of our pictures today are pretty bad, I'll admit, but don't condemn a whole industry for what a few wrong-headed individuals in it may do. On the whole, I think our slate is as clean as any industry in the country, and there can be no doubt that the screen is heightening its standards.

" 'Our business is to depict life, not to teach religion.

" 'I am thoroughly opposed to political censorship. Pictures do sometimes insult the public decency, though such cases are exceptions. But political censorship cannot benefit anyone or create public good. Only public opinion can do that. Our proper control is through public opinion and the laws against obscenity. . . .' "

KUYKENDALL URGES COOPERATION OF EXHIBITOR WITH COMMUNITY

New President of MPTOA Confers with Theatre Leaders To Get Proposals for Code in Line with Washington's Program

Ed Kuykendall, pioneer exhibitor of the South, assumed the presidency of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America last week. He immediately set about to effect a better undestanding of the exhibitor's problems by community leaders and the public, and to obtain the cooperation of exhibiors everywhere in welding a strong industry program. Mr. Kuykendall was elected by the board of directors, following the resignation of M. A. Lightman.

While other industry factions were studying President Roosevelt's industry control bill and code of practices for returning business to normalcy, Mr. Kuykendall set out on a swing of the Middlewest and East to confer with exhibitor leaders, both unaffiliated and affiliated with the MPTOA, to determine their proposals for a code which might be adopted by the motion picture industry in keeping with the Administration's legislation. Visiting Kansas City, St. Louis, then Chicago, Mr. Kuykendall arrived in New York Tuesday morning.

He said the industry code that will be worked out under the Roosevelt program will be beneficial to most factors in this business, provided it is constructed "along sane, sensible lines." He added: "It is up to the distribution and exhibition branches of this industry to work out a code that will be equitable to both. A code built along any other lines is doomed to failure."

Appeals to All Independents

Mr. Kuykendall late last week appealed to "every independent exhibitor unit to join with us in a constructive program to bring about a better understanding in relations between the man who operates the theatre and the distributor and producer." He said: "We have no intention of interfering with local units. It is only our hope and desire to cooperate with them in effecting better relations within the industry. Whether or not local organizations affiliate with the MPTOA, officially, I want it understood we stand ready and willing to cooperate with them."

On the return trip southward, Mr. Kuykendall expects to stop at Philadelphia and Washington. Before leaving New York late next week, he hopes to have completed arrangements for a meeting of the entire MPTOA directorate, at some central point, for discussion of policies and modus operandi of the national association. National officers and the executive committee will meet in New York Tuesday to discuss formulation of an exhibitors' code in line with the proposed control bill.

Plans for the next MPTOA convention, he said, have not been set, although Mr. Kuykendall favors an industrywide conference. Mr. Kuykendall declared his opinion was that the MPTOA should hold annual conventions in the spring, instead of the fall as heretofore. The change, he said, would permit exhibitor members to meet before the annual sales conventions and before the sales season is started. This would serve to give the distributors an insight into exhibitor problems of the past year and give them an idea of what exhibitors desire before formulating sales policies.

Mr. Kuykendall's first official act as MPTOA president was to attend the annual convention of the national council of the Boy Scouts of America, assembled last week at Kansas City, where, before some 800 Scout executives, representing 1,250,000 members, he asked for a better understanding of the exhibitor's problems on the part of community leaders and the public at large. Mr. Kuykendall is president of the eastern Mississippi Boy Scout Council.

"I appeal to every man and woman in the motion picture industry, regardless of their position, to cooperate and work with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to bring about a better and more efficient service to the theatre-going public of the nation."—Ed Kuykendall.

Explaining the importance of motion pictures as an industry and sketching their vital contributions to civic and national life and education, he then outlined to the conference the aims of the industry.

"I ask you to join with me and thousands of splendid men and women in the industry who are striving to make of it an institution to be proud of," was his appeal. "This can only be done by tolerance and friendly understanding of our problems."

"The theatre is a vital part of community life and the smaller the town the more important it is. The theatre man is expected to lend his theatre and his own efforts in local movements. Therefore, he merits the support of civic interests. We ask that you lend him a kindly hand in showing those pictures that merit your consideration.

"We submit when you take into consideration the large number of acceptable pictures and the small number that are obnoxious, that the industry is doing a good community job. The only way to bring about an increase in the type of picture you deem desirable is to support them. We supply the product the community shows a willingness to support."

Mr. Kuykendall appealed to the Scout delegation to contact the theatre men in their respective territories to help them bring about those things that both stand for. He also urged the assembled delegates to cooperate with the industry, as a vital community factor, in its efforts to become established as an essential industry on a par with others and eliminate it as a special target for discriminatory taxation, adverse legislation and censorship.

Before leaving Memphis, where he conferred with M. A. Lightman, Mr. Kuykendall said that he intends continuing as far as possible the policies inaugurated during the Lightman regime.

Regarding federal regulation of the industry, Mr. Kuykendall said that "the motion picture industry must not object to being lined up with all the other legitimate industries of the nation.

"The national government is sympathetic with our problems," he said. "And the government will find theatre owners most anxious to co-operate in any movement that is for the welfare of the nation.

"The theatre business is on a definite upturn. There is no question about it, we are getting back to normalcy, not to prosperity, but to normalcy, which is in many ways infinitely preferable.

"In our own business, we have for two years been weeding out many who did not belong. Now it has come down to a matter of showmanship and brains. Some of the chains are distintegrating and are being replaced by home-owned theatres. Even the successful chains are permitting their managers to manage the theatres now instead of being glorified office boys. We are getting back to the personal element in showmanship.

"It is my ambition to bring the producer, the distributor and the exhibitor and all other phases of the industry into a closer, more constructive relationship, since each is dependent upon the other for success. Nothing constructive can be accomplished by antagonizing each other.

"It is extremely necessary that we get proper recognition for the industry as an essential industry so that we will not be hopped on every time one of our governments needs to get some additional revenue.

"The record of the movies has generally been clean as compared with that of similar businesses," he said.

Kuykendall a Community Leader

Whole-heartedly committed to an industry program that would bring all phases and factions into harmony, Mr. Kuykendall commenced right in his own locality to line up community phases for harmonious cooperation in his business. He has been president of every civic organization in his native Lowndes County, in Mississippi, including the baseball association, Chamber of Commerce, Rotary Club, County Fair Association, boys' work and Boy Scout Council.

He organized, some 19 years ago, what was probably the first exhibitor organization in the south—the old Mississippi Theatre Owners Association—and he has been prominently identified with MPTO movements ever since. He has been one of the industry's staunchest fighters in legislative halls. Until recently he was president of the MPTO of Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee.

At the age of 12, and an orphan, Ed Kuykendall broke into the carnival business. His career in motion picture theatre operation began some few years later. He operates theatres in Tupelo, West Point and Columbus, Mississippi.

"Business is going to get better, and I like the thought expressed by the Atlanta Journal: 'Business is looking up for those who look it up'."

- - - WILL H. HAYS

"There are definite indications that general business conditions are improving and we, in the industry, can look forward to our business sharing in the general upturn by getting increased values for our pictures. Prices of commodities are steadily rising. Why not theatre admissions?"

Fox cast Preston Foster in the title role of "The Man Who Dared," which was suggested by incidents in the life of Chicago's late mayor, Anton Cermak. Preston's joy was unconfined, especially when he was told that a wrestling match was in the plot. Standing six feet two and weighing 196 pounds, big, brawny Mr. Foster was anxious to mix with his adversary. He changed his mind quickly, however, when Director Hamilton MacFadden introduced to him one George Du Count, 230 pounds of Russian steel.

Details of the match are not available, but Preston said that George must have thought he didn't like Russians. Instead of taking Du Count, Foster took da count. He now thinks that Fox should have filmed the life of the "late" Jimmy Walker, instead.

WHEN TWO Gaumont-British newsreel cameramen accompanied the recent Houston-Mount Everest expedition on a successful flight over the world's highest peak, reaching some 30,000 feet into the heavens, their fame went out to all the world. The intrepid fliers made a second flight, unofficially, and, again, the story was blazoned across the front pages of the press.

But, alas, there is another side to the double-daring. The second journey was conceived with no idea of vain glory or medals, nor did the cameramen fly just for the spin. It was made for purposes of vindication, because, when the initial flight had been completed, and many hundreds of feet of film had been brought safely back to earth again and exposed to the projector eye, some bright soul discovered that they had shot the wrong mountain!

AN ALERT newsreel cameraman and a few faddy Hollywood dandies are responsible for the recent development of a million dollar industry, thereby helping President Roosevelt to break the depression. They have pedaled the bicycle back into prosperity, after it had been as dead as the proverbial mackerel.

The fad started when a newsreel man "shot" some Hollywood stars, in shorts and bare legs, riding through Griffith Park and up back streets. Since then there have been more than 10,000 bikes sold in and around Los Angeles. Renting stations and sales counters quickly sprang up all over the country. Last week, capricious co-eds and heavy housewives took up the craze right under our editorial windows in Central Park. Manufacturers say there are several millions of dollars hanging in the balance.

The bicycle today is a gaudy affair with chromium rims, handlebars and many gadgets. They are done in various gay colors and are much too heavy to pedal with ease, weighing from 25 to 50 pounds. In the old days of light, well-made wheels, we called them "ice-wagons."

And another chapter is written in Hollywood history: the bi-cycle succeeds the pants-cycle.

PHYSICAL MERGER IMPRACTICABLE NOW, SALES HEADS ANSWER WILBY

Executives Cite Investment Cost, But Agree That Exhibitors' Suggestions for Elimination of Waste Merit Consideration

It's out of the question at this time, according to sales leaders in New York, to make the capital investment required to house all distribution centrally in key cities, as a means of economizing to effect rental reductions for all exhibitors, an idea set forth by R. B. Wilby, pioneer exhibitor and head of Alabama Theatres, Inc., in MOTION PICTURE HERALD last week. Most of them agree, however, that Mr. Wilby's suggestions for eliminating waste in distribution would contribute to a Utopia unprecedented in this field, were such things possible under present business conditions.

Distributors' recent investigations of a proposal for physical merging of distribution and exchange operations apparently have not substantiated the opinions of sponsors that such an idea would be economically possible. The proposal was first made last winter and was discussed at the industry conferences in Hollywood.

Theory and Practice

The opinions of several sales executives, in reflection on Mr. Wilby's suggestions, were not favorable. A few advanced the theory that Mr. Wilby was "talking out of turn," or that he was talking theoretically and that, were he to try his hand at managing distribution affairs, he might find problems comparable in their complexity to those which he now has on the receiving end of things.

Mr. Wilby's statement a week ago dealt chiefly with wastefulness of present distribution methods. He recommended that distributing companies not only merge in key cities but that they completely divorce the accessory business from their other interests. Another condition he protested is that the subsequent-run house plays pictures a few days or weeks after the first-run at considerably lower prices. This, he believes, is not fair play. Mr. Wilby, in short, asks for a common physical distribution of films, a common source of advertising accessories, reasonably "decent" protection to first-run exhibition, production of human stories rather than a lot of "psychological studies," and, "perhaps a few common sense exhibitors."

"Bob Wilby is talking in theory only," said Gradwell Sears, Warners' eastern and southern general sales manager. "One of the finest theatre men in the country, operating first-run houses in the main, he apparently does not realize that these things have been discussed back and forth over a period of months and that, so far, no suitable substitute has been discovered. We want to play fair with exhibitors in all matters—after all, we have to continue to sell pictures to them—but under present conditions the things he suggests are simply not feasible. A man who operates a first-run theatre sets his own prices, high or low, according to his own judgement. If a subsequent-run gets the same picture two or three weeks later and exhibits it at lower admission prices that's the lookout of the man who is in the first-run spot, and if he wants 'decent protection' the first thing he should do is to get together with the second-run exhibitor and iron it out with him."

Jack Schlaifer, Universal general sales manager, believes that Mr. Wilby's argument is not well founded, and points out that a merger of physical distribution would not materially reduce his percentage.

"We on the distribution end are dealing on a basis of ability to earn at the box-office," Mr. Schlaifer said, "and no matter what arrangement could be made for effecting socalled greater economies, the distributor would still get his 25 per cent and the theatre man would still get the same percentage he now receives. As to the argument for protection of exclusives, my position has always been dead against them. This business depends basically upon the theatre and you simply cannot run pictures on an exclusive basis. The neighborhood theatre is the clearing house for the first or exclusive run; the neighborhood theatre has a permanent audience of people who, more often than not, cannot afford to pay the prices demanded for an exclusive run, so they wait for the picture to come to the neighborhood house. They are the picture patrons who really count today and they must remain good patrons at all cost. Take away the neighborhood theatre and the whole business is lost."

A great deal of time and thought has been spent in an effort to ascertain the possibility of effecting economies through a general merger of physical distribution and, according to Al Lichtman, vice-president and general sales manager of United Artists, there is still a considerable amount of thought being given to the problem.

"I agree with Bob Wilby that a saving should be made in the accessories end of distribution," Mr. Lichtman said, "and, on the whole, I think his statement was prompted by an earnest desire to find some solution for his immediate problems and no one can blame him. I sincerely hope that this solution will be forthcoming in the very near future.

Agrees Exclusives Not Solution

"People want to see pictures in the theatre they prefer and it must not be forgotten that the price of admission is an extremely important factor," he said. "He may be entirely right about protection for exclusives, but after all, the public does the choosing. Exhibitors can regulate their differences in the matter of exclusives and subsequent runs by deciding at what price they can afford to sell their shows. There cannot, or should not, be the same vast difference in prices which formerly existed between first-runs and neighborhood houses. Exhibitors should get together and agree on a sensible scale of admission, and distributors must cooperate, otherwise the business will blow up. Of course, every town must be dealt with separately in this respect, but with 'decent' cooperation between exhibitors and distributors, along the lines of President Roosevelt's plea, 'Let's get together,' we should be able to iron out all of these difficulties."

Jack Cohn, vice-president in charge of Columbia distribution, agrees with Jack Schlaifer of Universal in saying that there can be no appreciable saving made in putting all exchanges together in key cities.

"It will take just as many salesmen, bookers and general clerical staffs to handle the situation," he said. "I don't think this is the time for the exhibitor to be worrying about mergers and whatnot. Independent theatres are coming into vogue again and then every man will be able to run his theatre as he sees fit and the salesmen will have to do some work for a change."

Felix Feist, general sales manager for MGM, said that he did not care to make any statement with regard to Mr. Wilby's remarks. He did, however, go so far as to say that he believes the recommendations are perfect, though not feasible at present, and that they eventually may come to pass.

TAX PROGRAM BEFORE SENATE

The tax program approved on Monday by the Senate Finance Committee for financing the $3,300,000,000 public works program in the Industrial Recovery Act eliminated increased income taxes, as voted by the House, and included the following provisions:

A capital stock tax of one-tenth of 1 per cent on the fair valuation of corporations, which is estimated to yield $80,000,000. Corporations would be left to declare the valuations on which the tax would be based, but a penalty levy of 5 per cent would be imposed on surplus profits above 12½ per cent.

An increase of half a cent in the existing gasoline tax of 1 cent a gallon, estimated to raise $62,000,000.

A flat tax of 5 per cent on corporation dividends deducted at the source, estimated to raise $73,000,000.

Three administrative changes in the tax laws, estimated to return $15,000,000. One would prohibit the carrying over into succeeding years of losses on stocks and bonds to be applied against gains; the second would deny private bankers the right to deduct such short-term losses on stocks and bonds from their ordinary income, and the third would prohibit individual members of a partnership from charging partnership losses off on their personal returns.

The consolidated return provision would be extended for two years beyond July 1, and the penalty when consolidated returns are made by corporations and chains in place of individual companies would be increased from three-fourth of 1 per cent to 1 per cent.

VALUE OF FILM SECURITIES SOARS $140,000,000 UNDER "NEW DEAL"

Market Value Up $130,400,000 for Film Shares on New York Stock Exchange Alone Since March 3; Curb, Bonds in Gain

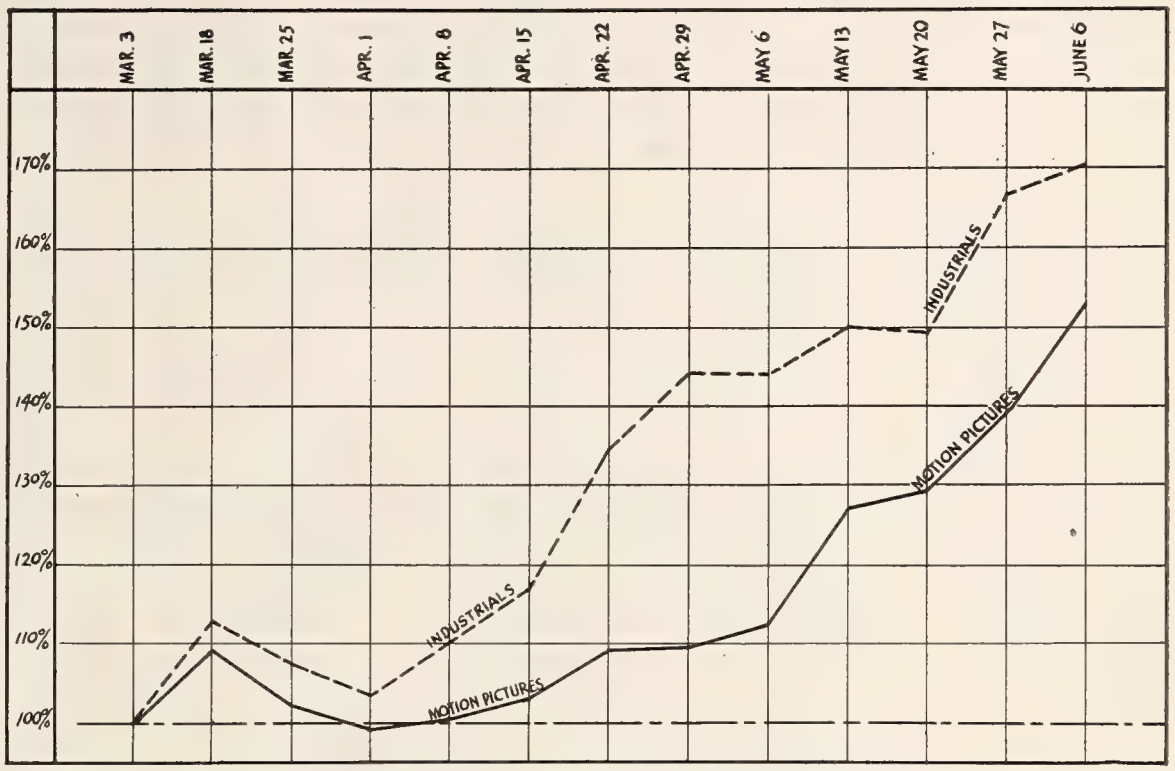
by THE ANALYST

Security structures of motion picture corporations were strengthened considerably by an appreciation in values totaling some $140,000,000 since President Roosevelt and his Administration at Washington took hold of the nation's business reins on March 4th for a speedy drive to normalcy. The excitement in the securities markets flared to new heights, sweeping motion picture and other issues to new levels and reheartening the investing public and film executives and workers who hold stocks of their corporations.

Since March 3, the day before Mr. Roosevelt was inaugurated, the market value of motion picture shares on the New York Stock Exchange alone, has swelled some $130,400,000, in the liveliest trading since the boom-and-crash days of 1929 and 1930.



Corresponding gains—giving some indication of Wall Street's belief in the active part the industry will play in the upward industrial cycle now unfolding—have been scored by motion picture stocks on the New York Curb market and on exchanges and by listed bonds of film companies.

On March 3, when the country's security markets were closed because of the nationwide banking crisis, the market value of the 18 common and preferred stocks of motion picture companies listed on the New York Stock Exchange was $167,455,651. At the close Tuesday, June 6, the value had soared to $297,876,135. Motion picture issues on the Curb in the same period rose more than 100 per cent in market value, from $4,177,-311 to $10,214,141. The industry's bonds on the stock exchange showed gains of from 4⅜ to 19⅛ points over March 3 lows.

Motion picture securities have shared fully in the whirlwind markets that resulted when new hope was injected into a depression-weary public by the shift of affairs at Washington. Following is the MOTION PICTURE HERALD's average of the 18 motion picture and allied stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange, showing how film stocks kept pace with the leading industrial average, as compiled by Dow, Jones & Co.

* Decrease.

Motion picture stock issues on the New York Stock Exchange have, like those of other industries, reacted quite favorably in the current movement which is sending securities soaring to new high levels since 1931. In the Chart above, the appreciation weekly in market value of 18 film and allied stocks is compared with the leading industrials, as compiled by Dow, Jones & Co. The comparison is based on prices as of March 3, the day before the "New Deal" started, this price representing 100 per cent.

The markets hesitated slightly when they reopened on March 15 after the bank holiday. Meanwhile, new confidence was bred by the quick and masterful way the banking situation was being straightened out by the new administration.

A pent-up speculative enthusiasm broke out when the country officially went off the gold standard recently and the public became inflation-minded. Stocks, bonds, wheat, cotton and other commodities boomed as the dollar declined in relation to gold currencies. Markets touched the highest points of the last two and three years.

Something more concrete, however, than the urge to convert money into securities and goods developed to add impetus to the "new deal" rise. It was a nationwide pick-up in general business also spurred by the administration's cheap credit policy, and so far it has defied even the usual seasonal influences of summer-time recession.

Individually, the biggest gain in the stock exchange film issues was made by Eastman Kodak, principal maker of raw film, which appreciated 31 points from March 3 to June 6 and, because of its high price and large amount of stock listed, showed a gain of $70,157,650 in market value to a total of $188,973,025.

Warner Brothers common rose almost $20,000,000 in market value from $3,801,-344 to $23,758,400, while Loew's common gained $14,275,999 to $31,663,433. Fox Film A, which rose from a March 3 low of 1¼ to a June 6 close of 4⅝, showed a market value appreciation of $8,196,602.

Every motion picture theatre owner in the country and the makers and sellers of film in Hollywood and in New York are vitally concerned with the continued progress of all industry in returning to normalcy. The marked upturn within the week, coupled with advances made previously, since March 4th, must eventually strengthen box office receipts.

Lewis W. Douglas, Director of the Budget, reported the return to work of some 1,500,000 since the Roosevelt Administration launched its business revival program. Even the most pessimistic exhibitors in the field were beginning to admit that the grip which the depression had on the nation's business was beginning to loosen.

The upswing in security markets occupied front page headlines. Typical of the feeling in the Iowa farm belt was the decision of the management of the Hipp theatre, at Sioux City, to raise salaries of its 11 employes 10 per cent.

Gains in business activity were reported by most of the nation's industries in telegrams replying to a questionnaire sent out by the Commerce Department. The National Association of Credit Men reports improvement in collections in 18 states, with but one state reporting poor collections and the balance indicating collections the same as last month.

The National Automobile Chamber of Commerce added the outlook appears to indicate a summer recession less than normal and remaining at a level higher than that of a year ago. Chicago Great Western Railroad ordered 500 steel box cars, breaking the severest business decline in the his-

News Projector Corporation Sues Trans-Lux on Contract

News Projector Corporation of New York filed suit in the United States district court at Wilmington, Del., this week against Trans-Lux Daylight Picture Screen Corporation, asking the court to rescind a contract of merger which News Projector had entered into with Trans-Lux.

The contract was made April 21, 1931 and prior to the contract, the plaintiff declares, it had understood from statements of Trans-Lux that the latter's net profit for three years commencing 1928 had been $1,259,740. The petition states that News Projector later learned these figures were false, the defendant intending to defraud.

Arbitration Clause Is Held Illegal by Judge

Illegality of the arbitration clause of the standard motion picture contract between producers and distributors permeates the entire contract, rendering it improper, Justice George B. Nelson declared in Wisconsin Supreme Court in Milwaukee this week. Justice Nelson's statement was made during the case of United Artists vs. the Odeon building and Jack Yeo of Beaver Dam.

The defendants sought to recover $1,335 on seven agreements to lease films, and United Artists contended that the arbitration clause was separable and a valid contract remained despite the illegality of the one clause.

tory of the railroad equipment industry. Pennsylvania and other lines reported a rise in car loadings over 1932.

The automobile industry reported considerable increases in output.

The National Association of Real Estate Boards completed its semi-annual survey, which indicated that the realty market is definitely on an upward swing.

Of prime importance as a favorable influence in fields of basic commodities was the continued upswing in prices of farm products, foodstuffs and the like. This was a part of the Roosevelt campaign to lessen the effects of below-normal prices, particularly in the farming areas. The current weekly index of all commodities is the highest in the year. Comparisons with recent weeks and with similar periods in 1932 show surprising increases.

Iron Age reported that with operations in the steel industry averaging 41 per cent of the ingot capacity of the mills, compared with 38 per cent one week ago, and an increasing demand, the industry is rapidly being established on the "firm footing of a seller's market." Cleveland openhearths were operating at 64 per cent of capacity. Steel plants set a new high for three years.

Two hundred more banks reopened in the month, with 5,478 institutions now operating.

Pay rises were ordered throughout the nation. Principal institutions which scaled wages higher were General Motors, raising pay of 100,000 workers five per cent; 75,000 miners in the four-state Appalachian coal region received increases of from 10 to 18 per cent. More than 130 trade associations indicated to Congressional leaders that firms in their industries have already made tentative agreements for increased wages and shorter working hours for labor.

Industrialists who had been conferring within the week indicated at Washington that 3,000,000 now unemployed will be put back to work by October 1.

Dunn & Bradstreet reported that the way has been cleared for continued progress in business. The survey finds that the current improvement has extended to consumption, employment and wage levels. The cash situation was further aided by the purchase in the open market of $28,000,000 by the Federal Reserve Banks. Currency in circulation during the week rose $17,000,000, the first gain since March.

Benjamin "Roasted" At Bachelor Dinner

About 150 "friends" of Paul Benjamin gathered at the Motion Picture Club Tuesday night to give him a bachelor dinner. Hal Horne was "roast master," assisted by the aforementioned number of stalwart filmites. Herman Robbins' National Screen company and members of the AMPA paid for the dinner.

Although reports have it that Mr. Benjamin took a severe mauling, he was apparently in no wise affected by it and was as determined as ever to enter into a marriage contract for the second time. Attempts to discover the identity of the fortunate young lady proved unavailing.

MOTION PICTURE ALMANAC OUT; 6,000 BIOGRAPHIES IN WHO'S WHO

Thousand Sketches of Personnel in All Branches Are Added; Many New Sections . . . All in Fast-Using Arrangement

Motion Picture Almanac, out this week, presents to the industry as well as to interests impinging directly or indirectly upon the industry, an all-embracing who's who of more than 6,000 in business and a workable array of facts and figures treating of every field of the making and merchandising of the motion picture.

Practicable rearrangement of biographical material has been effected by consolidation into a section which constitutes a separate entity of the annual Quigley publication with alphabetical guide on each page, a plan which indeed has been fitted to the entire volume. More than one thousand biographies have been added, with particular emphasis upon inclusion of new personal data of exhibitors and sales personnel in the field.

Time-Saving Arrangement

To the wealth of new material in the myriad directions of motion picture endeavor has been given an arrangement in sections providing for speedy and effective reference for the busy user. The same thought of time-saving has been applied to the simple but workable alphabetical index to the 800 or more pages of compressed, complete and up-to-date information.

Highlight data from the many sections reveal the vast size of the industry at large, as well as many revisions in the light of developments of 1933 and the past year. A few of these facts:

Approximate weekly attendance in the United States is shown to be between 55 and 70 millions, with the world figure estimated at 185 millions. Gross annual admissions in the United States are placed at $1,100,000,000. World capital investment is cited as two and a half billions of dollars, four-fifths of it in this country.

Tickets 25 Per Cent Lower

Illuminating asides are these: The average adult admission charge in 1932 was 25 per cent less than in the year 1931, and that figure in turn was a dime lower than that for 1930. And of those persons who paid the admissions, 75 to 85 per cent appeared at the box office between 7:30 p. m. and 8:30 p. m.

Contrary to popular belief, operation of the theatre demands three-fourths of each dollar paid at the cashier's window. Production and distribution combined take only one-fourth. The player's share is only 4½ cents, though this is twice the amount going to director and cameraman together. The theatre's own payroll takes practically as much as the entire fields of production and distribution. Theatre employees get 24.7 cents of the dollar, or approximately one-third of the exhibition total of 74 cents, of which 5.1 cents goes to interest and profit. Production's share is 18.2 cents; distribution, 7.8 cents. Second to the payroll cost to the exhibitor come rent, real estate and taxes, the three items totaling 15.4 cents to the dollar.

Production costs for 1932-33, estimated at $135,000,000, represented a considerable decline from the previous year. Studio investments, from 1926 through 1932, were placed at $94,370,000. Production volume in the United States in negative footage was 65 per cent of the world total last year, and 85 per cent from the standpoint of dollar evaluation.

Personnel employed in the industry in the United States was estimated at 290,000, as follows:

In production	30,000
In distribution	10,000
In theatres	250,000
Total	290,000

In this connection, placements by Central Casting Corporation were estimated at 214,584, while the annual Hollywood payroll fell off to $76,500,000, or a weekly $1,472,000.

Approximate consumption of raw film consumed domestically in 1932 was found to be approximately: Negative footage, 88,472,000; positive footage 828,408,000. The highest usage in the period 1925-32 was in the year 1928, when 106,973,600 feet of negative and 1,012,867,500 of negative were consumed.

Seven-tenths of the hundred million dollar advertising expenditure of the world business in the latest annual estimate was spent by the industry in the United States, this dividing as follows: in newspapers, magazines, and so on, 55 millions; billboards, 7½ millions; accessories, 5 millions, and other forms, 3 millions. The total number of advertisements placed daily in various media was reckoned at fifteen thousand.

Rapid Changes in Theatres

The theatre situation underwent rapid changes in 1932, and as far as circuit affiliation is concerned, has made even more drastic renovation in recent months. At the beginning of this year, it was noted that so completely had the industry turned to sound pictures that only 156 operating houses were classified as silent, and the question was where even these obtained product, though it should be noted that many were not operating full-time.

Other theatre highlights:

Total film theatres in U. S.	19,311
Total seating capacity	11,161,193
Total theatres operating	13,247
Theatres with sound-on-film	14,481
With only disc equipment	350
New theatres built in 1932	250
Average cost	*$70,000
Cost of new theatres	*$17,500,000
New theatres in 1931	$45,000,000
New theatres in 1930	$97,580,000
New theatres in 1929	$163,559,000

Estimated costs of the RKO Music Hall and the RKO Roxy, theatres in the $250,000,000 Radio City project in New York, approximate one-fourth of 1932 new theatre construction outlay.*

In common with the declines in expenditures in the domestic business of the motion picture, so too in exports was there a pronounced drop in both volume and value. For example, the exports of photographic and projection goods in 1932 totaled $13,538,341, as against $20,138,509 in the previous year.

Among the many new departments added in the 1933 Almanac are: a summarization of the bond and capital stock structures of motion picture companies; the careers of leading players in foreign countries; air line connections; foreign exchange restrictions; reviewing organizations and personnel; newspaper executives, a ready reference for tieup purposes; radio stations of National Broadcasting Company and Columbia; a detailed listing of publications on motion pictures, in all classifications; a complete listing of films made since the introduction of sound, with a separate grouping of 1932 and 1933 pictures.

BRUNETTES HAVE IT IN MOTION PICTURES

The phrase "Gentlemen prefer blondes" is as archaic in fact as in fiction, or else the crop of gentlemen has been definitely depleted, if the records of feminine pulchritude in Motion Picture Almanac, out this week, are a criterion. The truth is that the brunettes have it, two to one. To put it another way, only one of three women players are blondes.

Surprise is possibly in store also in revelations as to ages of feminine players. The average is not in the teens, instead, it is between 23 and 24 years. Their height approximates expectations, ranging for the most part between 5 feet 3 and 4 inches.

With the gleaming Pacific and its beaches at Hollywood's doorstep, swimming apparently is the favorite direction of interest away from the studios, but close in popularity are riding and dancing, in that order. One out of five are swimmers, at least in preference.

Men players average almost ten years older than their colleagues. The largest number fall in the age group of 32 to 33 years, and they're six-footers, too, for the most part, between 6 feet and 6 feet 1 inch. They take to the ocean also in diversion preferences, with golf, riding and tennis in that order.

The truly international character of the motion picture business that is Hollywood is reflected in the fact that two out of seven of the men players either were born in other countries or have had stage or screen experience overseas. Of feminine players the proportion was one out of five.

SEPARATE CODES FOR BRANCHES OF INDUSTRY TO MEET ROOSEVELT BILL

Film Leaders Are Formulating Preliminary Details of Codes of Practice, Tentative Plans Calling for Separate Codes

BULLETIN

Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, late Wednesday called a general meeting of leaders in the film industry for Friday in New York to discuss a trade practice code to conform with President Roosevelt's industry control bill.

by FRANCIS L. BURT
Washington Correspondent

Industrial control legislation for business recovery continued during the week to monopolize the legislative spotlight at Washington. Final Congressional action was expected hourly. Meanwhile leaders of the motion picture industry were formulating preliminary details of codes of business practice, which President Roosevelt's legislation would set up in all industries. Tentative proposals of film executives provide for a separate code for each of the three major branches of the industry.

Facing strong opposition on four points—licensing, labor, imports and taxation—the measure was under consideration in the Senate. It is not expected that Congress will adjourn, as expected, on Saturday, the session possibly continuing for several weeks.

Manufacturers object to licensing on general principles; the labor provisions are the subject of controversy between labor and employers; domestic manufacturers demand protection from imports which may adversely affect them, and everybody objects to taxes, which are a part of the recovery bill.

Tax on Corporations

As reported to the Senate by its finance committee, the bill carries, instead of the increases in income tax rates written by the House of Representatives, a tax of one-tenth of one per cent on the "true worth" of corporations, which is to be fixed by the corporations themselves with a penalty in the form of a five per cent tax on excessive profits as a deterrent to undervaluation; a five per cent tax on dividends, to be collected at the source; an increase to 1½ cents per gallon in the gasoline tax, and administrative changes in the present revenue law, the most important of which is repeal of the present privilege of carrying stock losses over to a succeeding year.

Although the organization for the control of industry has not yet been set up, broad outlines of the Administration's plans have been made known. Of chief importance is the dependence which the Administration is placing upon the voluntary cooperation of industry, it not being intended to force any industry immediately to adopt a code, but the various trades being expected to get together and agree upon shorter hours and adequate pay, the first objectives of the bill.

For the film industry, this is interpreted as meaning that the film companies and exhibitors will be given adequate time in which to reach an agreement. When they have agreed on these points—and any others which they may desire to cover—they will be asked to send a committee to Washington to confer with officials of the industrial-recovery administration.

The committee, however, will have to represent not only the majority of the industry agreeing to the code, but also any minority which may not agree as well as any interests which are not members of the trade association (Allied, MPTOA, MPPDA) drafting the document.

The plans of the Administration contemplate that eventually every branch of trade and industry shall operate under agreements, including "white collar" employes and retailers.

As the industrial-recovery measure proceeds toward enactment, the threat of conflicting with President Roosevelt's plans for reciprocal tariffs arises. Tariff changes would, undoubtedly, involve the foreign market for American films.

Fearing opposition which would unduly prolong the session of Congress, President Roosevelt has for the time being abandoned his plan to seek control of the tariff in order to negotiate new commercial treaties.

This, however, may not be of great importance, since the general consensus is that the London economic conference, which opens June 12, will not complete its labors for many months.

Of additional interest to the motion picture industry was the passage by the House of the McKeown bankruptcy bill and an official explanation which was issued by the Federal Trade Commission of the new act governing the sale of securities.

Securities Control Act Explained

The new securities control act, a Roosevelt measure, was explained by the Federal Trade Commission as follows:

Provisions regarding fraudulent statements and practices are now in effect, but with regard to the dates on which the registration statements become effective there are provisions for different times. For all practical purposes the act, as it refers to registration statements, will not be in full operation until 60 days following the date of enactment, May 27. The principal sections which became immediately effective were:

Section 12 (2). Providing that the seller shall be liable to the buyer for securities sold by means of literature or oral communications which contain "an untrue statement of a material fact" or which "omits to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements in the light of the circumstances under which they were made, not misleading."

Section 17 (entire). Regarding the use of fraud or deception in the sale of securities.

Both sections apply to outstanding securities as well as to new issues which are to be placed in the market after registration.

The McKeown bill providing for voluntary reorganization of corporations under the new bankruptcy laws is designed to help insolvent corporations work out refinancing plans under guidance, avoiding bankruptcy procedure and preventing a small number of creditors from blocking the plans.

Film Industry Discussing Plans for Proposed Code

The motion picture industry is already discussing plans for codes to be worked out by the industry itself. In New York, industry leaders have been studying and discussing the broad outlines of a proposed code, but no final action has been taken by producers and distributors as they are still awaiting passage of President Roosevelt's industrial control bill in order to determine more specific information with regard to the bill's structure. After the bill becomes law, the industry will make an intensive drive to gather together all loose ends and draw up definite plans for a motion picture code.

Securities Control Action and Bankruptcy Bill Affect Film Industry; Allied May Refuse To Aid in Drafting of Code

Meanwhile preliminary plans are being made at confidential meetings in New York for separate codes for production, distribution and exhibition. The proposals are still only in the elementary stages, according to the MPPDA.

The industry's opportunity of self-regulation under the President's bill, together with definite signs of improvement in business in many parts of the country, are regarded by Harold B. Franklin, RKO theatre head, as the greatest advantages afforded the industry since 1929. "While the industry control bill is an opportunity for co-ordination and the elimination of waste within the industry, we must go forward with well-considered steps, having in mind the welfare of the industry as a whole."

Appeal to Independents

Already an appeal has been made to independent producers, distributors and exchange men to prepare to take part in the industry's program for drawing up its own code of fair competition. Tobias A. Keppler, attorney for the newly organized Progressive Motion Picture Producers and Distributors' Association, at a recent meeting of the association, described the independents' right to participate in the drawing up of the industry's trade practice code as "an unbelievable opportunity" for this group. Mr. Keppler also urged a need for a free distribution and exhibition market for independent product.

Meanwhile plans for MPTOA participation in industry activities along these lines are being crystallized by Ed Kuykendall, newly elected president of the organization, in a series of conferences with the heads of local MPTOA units throughout the Middlewest and East. The code will be beneficial to a majority of factors within the industry "only providing it is constructed along sane, sensible lines," Mr. Kuykendall said upon his arrival in New York.

MPTOA national officers and executive committee will meet in New York Tuesday to discuss formulation of a code for exhibitors in conformity with the projected industry control bill.

Allied Taking Steps

A special meeting of the Allied national board was being held in New York on Wednesday and Thursday to discuss that organization's part in the drawing up of the industry's code. Allied of Iowa and Nebraska is sending proxies to all members to authorize its officers to act in formulating a code for the industry. Independent unaffiliated exhibitors in Chicago this week joined Allied in a mass meeting called by Aaron Saperstein to arouse support for Allied's participation in the code's formation.

A canvass of Allied directors in New York indicated Wednesday that Allied will refuse to participate in the conferences for drawing up a trade practice code, hoping their attitude will cause government intervention.

Allied leaders attending the New York meetings include James C. Ritter, H. M. Richey, Sidney Samuelson, H. A. Cole, Aaron Saperstein, Fred Herrington, Lester Martin and Abram F. Myers.

WARNER LOSS CUT IN HALF ON EVE OF GENERAL BUSINESS IMPROVEMENT

Loss Reduced $1,723,266 in 13 Weeks Over Same Period Last Year; 26 Weeks' Figures Show Drop Less Than 1932 Loss

Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., and subsidiary companies reported last weekend a net operating loss of $1,695,564 for the 13 weeks and a net loss of $3,442,325 for the 26 weeks ended February 25, 1933. A comparison with similar periods in 1932, which follows, shows that the management reduced losses nearly in half:

	PERIODS ENDED FEBRUARY 25
	13 WEEKS	26 WEEKS
1932	$3,418,830	$5,267,699
1933	1,695,564	3,442,325
REDUCTION IN LOSSES	$1,723,266	$1,825,374

Although the various Warner corporations arrived, like most others, at the eve of the "New Deal" for American industry with financial losses in keeping with those times, their financial structure had been so liquidated and so rehabilitated after the effects of the prolonged depression, that any improvement arising from President Roosevelt's new business program could show only a favorable reaction immediately on its next balance sheet. The general upturn since then, coupled with the inspiring grosses earned by "42nd Street" during March, April and May, are understood to have placed the corporation in a position which now is quite favorable.

Then, too, the completion of a dozen or more feature pictures, all ready for release, and the results of the process of liquidation, which preclude serious interference with present operations, further brighten the new complexion of the Warner financial structure.

Actual Profit from Operations

Losses reported for both the 13-week and the 26-week periods ended on Feb. 25, 1933, were attributable to amortization and depreciation and were part of the company's plans for liquidation. Actually, a profit of $863,584 was earned in operations in the 26 weeks.

The deficit was credited during the six months with $1,589,814, representing profit on the redemption of funded indebtedness and adjustment of income tax and other reserves applicable to prior years.

Charges were made against deficit in the amount of $2,226,920, representing losses on the sale or abandonment of unprofitable properties, and also on losses from the sale of a subsidiary company and on miscellaneous investments and advances and after setting up a provision for probable loss on the guaranty of mortgage bonds of an affiliated company. This probable loss represents a write-off of $555,000.

On February 25, 1933, bank loans totaled only $500,000, all of which have since been paid.

The company has anticipated the retirement of its optional 6 per cent convertible debentures required for the purchase fund Aug. 1, 1933.

Net Income of $11,652,000 in 26 Weeks

Earning possibilities even during the low 26-week period were indicated by a net income of $11,652,823, before amortization and depreciation, interest and miscellaneous charges.

The consolidated balance sheet on Feb. 25, 1933, listed current assets of $15,390,369, as against current liabilities of $13,457,083. Total assets were $176,639,083.

Included in current assets were: Cash, $3,078,432; notes receivable, $93,791; "trade customers," less reserves, $1,020,249; inventories (including productions released, completed or in work, all at cost), $9,374,827. Raw materials, accessories and supplies; rights and scenarios unproduced, all at cost, and production and royalty advances, were worth $1,258,493.

Investments and advances, listed at $3,645,105, included, among other items: Investments in and advances to Skouras Bros. Enterprises, St. Louis Amusement Co., and in equity receiverships; also, investments in foreign patents, license rights and the like, and in miscellaneous investments.

Fixed assets: Properties owned and equipment, at cost less reserves, $119,143,955; properties leased and equipment, at cost less reserves, $26,442,747.

Deferred charges, totaling $1,006,937, represented prepaid taxes, insurance, rents and expenses, all prepaid.

Goodwill is listed at $8,549,829.

Liabilities Listed

Current liabilities were: Notes payable, $1,018,560; purchase money obligations, $818,772; accounts payable, $6,058,374 (which includes past due interest of $115,537 on funded debt of subsidiary companies); sundry accruals, $3,882,342; due to affiliated companies, $134,087; royalties payable, $1,241,033; advance payment of films, deposits, etc., $303,911. Total, $13,457,083.

The corporation listed $1,052,716 in purchase money or contractual obligations and notes payable maturing serially after one year.

Mortgages and funded debt included: Optional 6 per cent convertible debentures, series due 1939, less $90,000 held in treasury, $35,810,000; mortgages and other bond issues, less bonds held in treasury, $58,152,416.

According to Price, Waterhouse & Co., C. P. A., the accounts of foreign film subsidiaries and branches consolidated in the statement, are as at Jan. 28, 1933, except the Australian subsidiary, which has been included to Dec. 31, 1932.

Productions Named

Six Warner district managers arrived in New York Tuesday for their annual preparatory conferences for the new season with Major Albert Warner, Gradwell Sears and A. W. Smith, Warner distribution executives. Those attending the conferences are, Bob Smeltzer, Washington; Carl Lesserman, Chicago; Fred Jack, Dallas; Tom Spry, Boston; N. H. Brower, Los Angeles, and Roy Haines, of Cincinnati.

Meanwhile, in Hollywood, the largest production program in eight years was announced on Tuesday by Jack L. Warner, vice-president in charge of production, for the 1933-34 schedule. Sixty features and a number of short subjects will be produced at the Burbank studios, which resume full activity this week.

Among the first to go into production is "Footlight Parade," a musical successor to "42nd Street" and "Gold Diggers." In "Footlight Parade" will appear James Cagney, Joan Blondell, Dick Powell and Ruby Keeler, Guy Kibbe, Claire Dodd, Allen Jenkins and Gordon Westcott. Lloyd Bacon has been given the directorial assignment, and Busby Berkeley will again create and direct the musical numbers.

Edward G. Robinson will be starred in "Red Meat," a story of the Middle West, under direction of Alfred E. Green.

Barbara Stanwyck will have the star role in a story to be directed by Archie Mayo.

"Wild Boys of the Road" will be directed by William Wellman. This is a story of juvenile tramps, both boys and girls.

"Bureau of Missing Persons," a dramatic story of city life, will probably star James Cagney. Roy Del Ruth will direct.

Ruth Chatterton will be starred in a story of New York, "The House on 56th Street."

Philo Vance, the screen detective character, will be brought back to the screen when William Powell stars in "The Kennel Murder Case," an S. S. Van Dine mystery. Michael Curtiz will direct.

"Convention City," a comedy-drama with an Atlantic City background, dealing with commercial conventions, will have a cast headed by Adolph Menjou.

Paul Muni will star in "America Kneels." Mervyn Le Roy will direct.

"Son of the Gobs," a navy comedy with Joe E. Brown.

"Shanghai Orchid," a story of China, with Richard Barthelmess. William Dieterle will direct.

Loss Attributable to Amortization and Depreciation as Actual Profit of $863,584 Was Earned in 26 Weeks

Types Varied

In the Warner Bros. First National productions there will be no one special trend, Jack Warner said. "Of the sixty pictures on our schedule no two can be classed as of the same type," he declared. "Several musicals will be made, but these will all be dramatic stories into which music is logically interwoven, not merely musical comedies photographed as such."

Mr. Warner said that included on the coming year's program will be at least six pictures of road-show calibre.

Many new names appear in the list of stars under contract to Warner-First National, the most recent acquisitions being Leslie Howard and Adolph Menjou.

Mr. Jack Warner also announced on Tuesday the formation of his new production staff, headed by Hal B. Wallis as executive of production. Also, Mr. Warner named Robert Lord, Robert Presnell and James Seymour as new supervisors, all of whom are advanced from the studio's writing staff to executive positions. This is in addition to Henry Blanke, who has been a supervisor for years.

"Gold Diggers" Campaign

As hundreds of exhibitors are preparing to show "Gold Diggers of 1933," which opens generally this week in New York following five pre-release openings during the past week, S. Charles Einfeld, Warner executive in charge of advertising and publicity, revealed this week the national campaign that is being put behind this musical special.

Four weeks of radio plugging over nation wide hook-ups, through the five songs, have preceded release.

Through Remick Music Corp., which is handling the music end of the picture, every music store in the country has been supplied with window streamers, cards and title pages.

One exploitation idea is an elastic newspaper contest. This contest, which can run for either six, twelve or 18 days, asks newspaper readers to be Beauty Contest judges. Eighteen two-column pictures of girls in the picture are provided.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

Dinner at Eight

(MGM)

Drama and Comedy

Pages would be necessary to detail the showmanship values of this epoch-making show. The simplest yet most comprehensive way in which this writer knows how to describe it is this: It has everything that a producer could put into a show—everything that an exhibitor wants in one—everything that patrons want in the way of screen entertainment.

Primary reaction is "What the heck is this all about"; thoughtful analysis, however, convinces me that it is one of the greatest pieces of motion picture entertainment of all time. There are names by the carload, stars that are stars, established stars in bit parts. The story runs the gamut of entertainment element—drama, romance, comedy, pathos—that stirred the emotions of the preview audience to frenzied applause. Great acting, dialogue and situations make the plot powerful. For the most part the action is confined to individuals or two or three, yet that simplicity makes for spectacle that can be interpreted only as bigness.

As a stage play, the vehicle has met with grand success and has been the recipient of tremendous publicity. Main Street as well as Broadway in its appeal, the screen version should pack every theatre.

The technique of "If I Had a Million," vastly improved, is adopted. Upon a central theme of Mrs. Jordan arranging a dinner for a pair of visiting British aristocrats, a definite vein of continuity binds up the various episodes. Thus, while Mrs. Jordan envisions the peak of social supremacy, her husband, Oliver, is more concerned as to how he can save the Jordan Shipping Line. First into the set-up is Carlotta, a now financially embarrassed, but retired trouper of the "gay nineties" era, and an old flame of Oliver. Carlotta wants to sell her Jordan stock. Oliver begs her to hold on. You know how Dressler puts it over.

Then we meet Dan Packard. His game is to chisel in on the Jordan properties while posing as a friend. He makes a great to-do in the Beery fashion of the fact that the President wants him down in Washington as a close adviser. Then comes Kitty, just as you expect Harlow, Dan's hard-boiled but socially ambitious wife, who makes use of all the self-sympathy technique to charm the philandering Dr. Talbot. Many scenes centering on this trio brought gales of laughter.

Comes then Larry Renault, a busted down, yet egotistical old matinee idol and silent screen star, who makes Paula Jordan fall madly in love with him. Max, his agent, brings Jo Stengel to interview the great Larry. When Max gives Larry the real lowdown on himself, the old star turns on the gas.

Mrs. Jordan is frantically preparing for her dinner as Oliver's heart starts to give out. Carlotta tells Paula that Larry has killed himself; urges her to foster her romance with Ernest. In the end the visiting celebrities send their regrets.

The real showman's only problem should be considering how he can accommodate all who will want to see it. Naturally the publicity emanating from key city first runs will give it a boost that should carry all the way. With that for a starter, word-of-mouth advertising, and extraordinary exploitation, the show can hardly be less than a gold mine.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Silk Express

(Warner Bros.)

Melodrama

Mystery and melodrama constitute the backbone of this rather novel picture. Suspense is created by speculation as to who is actually responsible for all the killing and related dirty work, and comedy is injected by the hick detective's determination to solve his own murder case. Although a girl appears in the cast, romance is practically ignored. Dealing with a fictionized story of what happens aboard one of those highly secretive special trains that transfer valuable shipments of silk from Seattle to New York, "Silk Express" never pretends to be pretentious, yet it definitely establishes itself as a good program picture that should hold the interest of the run-of-the-mill patrons.

The introductory set-up is such as to place more than usual attention on this particular special. With the raw silk market rising, Kilgore, head of the manufacturers' association, finds that Myton has cornered the market and is holding out for top prices. Determined to break the combine, Kilgore imports a cargo from Japan. In Seattle it is estabished that Craft and Burns, train guards, are Myton's henchmen. Their job is to prevent the train reaching New York within the 72 hours that will enable Kilgore to meet his contracts. Brought aboard the train also is Myberg, victim of a tropical disease, who must be rushed to New York, besides his daughter Paula and Dr. Rolph.

A car is discovered afire. A man named Johnson is found dead. Kilgore determines to push on, but the train is stopped by Sheriff McDuff, who has found a note tossed from the speeding train.

Of course, everyone is suspected. McDuff is kidnapped and the train starts on again. As the train approaches New York the conductor is found dead.

Things happen fast and furious as the tramp, Rusty, is revealed as a special insurance investigator; that Clark was Myton's ace in the hole to delay the train; that Myberg was on the up and up all the time and that his eye signaling identified Craft and Burns as the killers.

Mystery of the most intriguing type is the predominant selling angle. Defy all the amateur crime slueths to put their finger on the killer. Thus thrill should take the place of the missing romance.

Because there is so little of interest to feminine patrons in such an out-and-out mystery story, exploitation directed at them based on the title should be effective. Tieups with department stores, silk shops, and so on, premised on the romance of silk from the raw cocoon stage to the fine finished product, should not be overlooked. Window displays, contact newspaper advertising—supplemented with essay contests on the story of silk—for school children, should have a valuable function in this line of exploitation.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

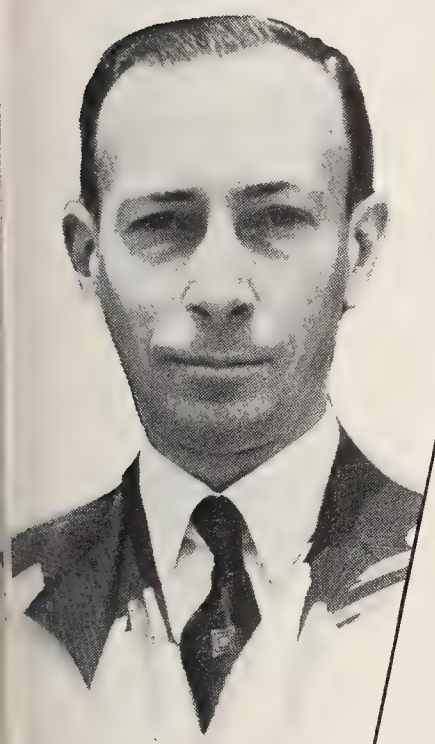
Jennie Gerhardt

(Paramount-Schulberg)



Drama

Dramatic romance that brings both happiness and tragedy to its central character is the motivating element of this show. Like "Forbidden" and "Back Street," it covers a number of years. Essentially, it is a woman's picture of the tear-jerker type. As in the case of most life-love stories, it is both impressive and sometimes depressing. Andience sympathy naturally accrues to the girl whom men want but never marry.

There is a definite melodramatic atmosphere to the whole story. Two men figure in the life of Jennie Gerhardt. Jennie meets Senator Brander. He falls in love with her and despite neighborhood gossip and over the objections of her father, who can see no good in the rich man-poor girl relation, the romance continues to a point where the Senator seduces Jennie. Under the promise of marriage he goes to Washington, but is killed in a train wreck. Jennie goes to another city, the baby is born and the unwed mother gets a job as maid to Louise Kane, whose brother, Lester, falls in love with the maid. Lester's father sends him to Chicago as branch manager, but Jennie goes along. For years their romance continues.

Then, as Lester rises in the financial world, he marries Letty. To Jennie, earning her living as a dressmaker, comes tragedy as Vesta

HERE'S THE ANSWER TO DOUBLE FEATURES: One good feature and Educational's short subjects make more money . . . . .

Mr. E. W. Hammons,
Educational Film Exchange,

New York City, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Hammons:

" I am happy to tell you that abandonment of the double feature policy and return to diversified programs is working out most satisfactorily in Southern California.

We never were in sympathy with the double bill. Exhibitors who fell for double features as a general policy were only kidding themselves. A well-balanced program of a good feature, supported by carefully chosen short subjects always gave more audience satisfaction and pleased the majority of patrons.

We are playing the entire Educational Pictures program of short subjects and are giving our patrons diversified bills with your pictures and other selected short subjects. The result is what we expected it to be--we take in more money at the box-office than we did with double features. I think that is the best possible answer to the whole double feature question".

Yours very truly,

dies after a fall at high school graduation ceremonies. More tragedy as Lester is stricken while on a European mission. He sends for her, and their early happiness is renewed just before Lester dies. Then Jennie is alone and friendless.

"Jennie Gerhardt" is strictly an adult picture. Selling it successfully depends upon your ability to construct campaigns that will intrigue human interest and sympathy in the character of Jennie. Despite the large cast, practically all the action is confined to Sylvia Sydney and Donald Cook. Surrounding the power of the Sydney draw with catchlines that accentuate the romance, drama and tragedy of love beyond the pale, appears the most effective plan.

The name of Dreiser should not be overlooked. His readers constitute a potential audience. Straight advertising will have to carry the information-spreading load, inasmuch as there is little about the picture, save personalities, that permits spot ballyhoo.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Cocktail Hour

Comedy-Drama

Spiced with highly enjoyable comedy throughout, "Cocktail Hour" falls into the classification of rather sophisticated, but definitely entertaining comedy-drama. By sophistication is not meant, in this case, risqueness of any sort, but rather a general tone of smartness, carried out in theme and development. Basically the story should be one of general appeal, concerning as it does the independent girl who refuses to give up her "freedom" for marriage, but learns her lesson.

The drama is never permitted to become too dramatic, a sort of "tongue-in-cheek" attitude characterizing the performances of the leading players, which serves to make for greater enjoyment.

Since the title will almost unquestionably indicate to patrons that here is something highly sophisticated, it would be well to emphasize rather the central theme as indicated than the title itself, implying that the "cocktail hour" is merely an effort on the part of the girl to live independently, freely, by herself, on a Paris vacation, until, after a series of mishaps, she succumbs to the thought of protection.

The best marquee name in the cast is that of Bebe Daniels, who renders a choice performance, catching the right note of comedy drama which is the basis of the picture's mood. With her is Randolph Scott, who readily matches her performance. The rest of the cast, including especially Muriel Kirkland, Sidney Blackmer and Barry Norton, is definitely capable.

The scene opens in the New York studio of Miss Daniels, highly successful commercial artist, where she is surrounded by men who probably think more of her money than herself. Scott, advertising manager for whom she works, is in love with her, but thinks her "freedom" ideas nonsense—and tells her so. On board ship, she meets Blackmer, married Englishman, who is perpetually after attractive women. In Paris, where she has been followed by the smitten young Norton, she is annoyed by Blackmer. Norton breaks into the hotel room, and in the scuffle which follows, accidentally throws Blackmer from a window. Scott, who had followed her to Paris, straightens the situation and, beaten, Miss Daniels admits she doesn't want freedom nearly as much as she wants Randy Scott.

The picture is fast-moving, lively and highly entertaining, and there is no reason why even the most straightlaced community should find it objectionable despite its title and general air of sophistication. Basically, it is a human, and not altogether new story. Sell the theme, the performances and get over the true implication of the title so that it will not be an obstacle in communities which would rather not have sophisticated material.—Aaronson, New York.

Goldie Gets Along

(Radio)

Drama

The small town girl, with an ambition in the Hollywood direction, is the not too unusual or new theme of this picture, which must necessarily fall into the classification of average program fare. Though the performances are adequate, there are no outstanding names with which to attract patronage. Heading the cast is Lili Damita, hers being perhaps the only name of patron-attracting potentialities.

A brief resume of the story will best indicate which angles will be best adapted for selling the picture. Miss Damita is engaged to marry Charles Morton, a reasonably effective juvenile, in the little town of Crestview, New Jersey. The puritanical relations with whom she lives get on her nerves, and when Morton proposes "settling down" she flies into a tantrum, tells him she is going to Hollywood despite him and everything else, and starts on her way.

En route, she rides with an unknown young man and leaves him standing at a gas station while she takes his car. It happens to belong to the mayor of a town, whom she "vamps" out of a jail sentence, evading her pursuing fiance. There also she meets Sam Hardy, bathing beauty contest promoter in various small towns, with a method by which his employee wins the contest and he takes the prize money. She goes with him, capturing each contest under an assumed name as they go.

Finally, when no "split" appears forthcoming from Hardy, who, incidentally, handles his role well and supplies a goodly portion of comedy, she double crosses him, takes $1,000, and hits Hollywood—and the pavements for many a long day, without results. On her trail come Hardy, posing as a detective, and Morton, still persisting, hoping she has rid herself of the "Hollywood bug." Through a ruse, she finally obtains a contract, but when Morton walks in, with a prepared story about having been involved in a check forgery and wanted by the police, she succumbs, with Crestview and "settling down" as the promised land.

Working up the idea of the Hollywood-struck girls for what it may be worth among the younger set of the community should prove advantageous selling, while a ready-made opportunity for a bathing beauty contest of local "talent" at the theatre in conjunction with the picture, offering small prizes, should bring out the dads and mothers in fair numbers. The contest should run the length of the picture's run, and much pre-selling of the contest prior to the run of the film should be worthwhile. The picture, however, does not offer very much, so it would be well not to promise too much. It provides a moderate amount of entertainment.—Aaronson, New York.

His Private Secretary

(Showmen's Pictures)

Drama

This, the first offering of D. J. Mountan's Showmen's Pictures, under the brand name of Screencraft Productions, is a moderately entertaining drama done in the time honored style but contriving at the same time to come satisfactorily into the average category. It is most readily adaptable to the smaller theatre in the lesser situation.

There are no outstanding names with which to decorate the marquee, the two leading players being Evalyn Knapp and John Wayne, familiar names but that is all. The others, known, satisfactory, are nonetheless of no marquee value.

The story has been done before. It concerns the son of the wealthy father, given several opportunities in the ancestral business and failing at each attempt due to inability to keep his mind on the business and away from the opposite sex. Accidentally the young man, played by Wayne, meets the granddaughter of a minister in a small town when he goes to collect a bill, and she, Miss Knapp, finally gives in after assiduous pursuit by Wayne. He forgets about the bill, which costs him his job. The two, married, go to the city, and Wayne's father, Reginald Barlow, all but throws him out of the office when he tells him he is married.

Going to see the father, she obtains a post as his private secretary without revealing her identity, and proves herself completely indispensable to him. When she, in turn, misunderstands a situation in which she finds Wayne with a former flame, she leaves him, Wayne turns over a new leaf, makes a success at the business and eventually she returns to her husband and father-in-law to conclude the story.

It will perhaps be necessary to sell the picture along conventional lines, since it contains little that may be unusually exploited. A possible line, from the exploitation angle, appears in the private secretary angle. Sell the idea of the girl who reformed her young wastrel husband, and then did the same for her hard-bitten father-in-law without his realizing it, by becoming his private secretary and bringing father and son together. The picture probably will appeal more particularly to the younger people, and, though containing nothing in the least objectionable, probably will be little appreciated by juvenile patronage.—Aaronson, New York.

Net earnings of Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., after taxes and charges, were $265,400, for the quarter ended in March. This amounts to 12 cents per share on the common, compared with $294,152, or 17 cents per share, for the same quarter last year.

Statewide Case Settled; Referee To Be Appointed

The case of Statewide Theatres Corporation, bankrupt Milwaukee company and subsidiary of Midwesco, was adjudicated by U. S. district court judge John P. Nields in Wilmington, Del. The petition of Irving Barry, who said he was an officer of the theatre company authorized by the board to file the voluntary petition in bankruptcy, was accepted and a referee will be appointed in about a week. On May 16, Fox Film, Wesco, and Fox Wisconsin, through A. L. Ward, a Wilmington attorney, filed an involuntary petition against Statewide and the court directed that an answer be filed.

Harry Arthur is understood to have taken over seven houses from Fox West Coast and is negotiating for more theatres now included in this group. In Kansas City a scheduled meeting of Fox Midland Theatre Company, creditor for the election of trustees, was continued from May 24 to June 8. In the interim, attorneys will seek to work out an order they can agree upon for submission to the federal district court to stay bankruptcy proceedings pending consideration by the court of a motion to discharge the receiver.

Taming the Jungle

(Invincible)

Pictorial Record

Actually, this picture, produced by Paul D. Wyman, is little more than a pictorial record of the manner in which wild animals, chiefly lions, tigers and leopards, are trained for exhibition.

Various well known trainers of the wild jungle beasts are shown at their work, armed with whip, stick, chair and sometimes gun, forcing the animals into submission to their commands, bringing them to the point where they will obey with little show of opposition the will of their masters.

The opening sequences of the rather short feature pictures the life of the jungle briefly, then the manner of capturing alive tigers and lions. The rest of the film is devoted to the training of the animals from their first entrance into the cage to the time when they are ready for exhibition.

The trainers who appear are Melvin Koontz, who, incidentally, wears a gun loaded with bullets, not blanks, as is often supposed; Dean Foix, Chubby Guilfoyle and Olga Celeste, the only well known woman wild animal trainer, whose specialty is the handling of leopards.

There is a certain amount of punch in the film naturally, while the closing sequence, which has Koontz wrestling in fun with a lion, is highly unusual. It is doubtful if the film, standing alone, is strong enough to be the feature mainstay of a regular run theatre program, but it may serve as a special attraction of some sort, and may be adaptable to a school tieup. The material involved is interesting, and in a measure entertaining, but not in the manner that a screened play is entertaining. Lobby stills of the trainers and their animals may prove helpful, and if there is anything resembling a circus in or approaching the community, the film has definite selling possibilities.—AARONSON, New York.

Musical Romance

A light comedy touch and a fine sparkle of melodious music serve to make this musical romance of mythical kingdoms, a wilful and charming princess and an adventurous prince an entertaining, often amusing screen play. Featured is Martha Eggerth, said to be a charmer of the stage and screen of Vienna, who is in effect a selling point for those exhibitors who are in situations warranting use of a foreign-make picture.

There are no superimposed subtitle translations of the German dialogue. But let it be understood that they are quite unnecessary, since the action of the story is perfectly understandable to one lacking a knowledge of the language, by reason, perhaps, of the capable performances of the cast. It is true that a knowledge of German would enable the patron more thoroughly to appreciate the comedy of the piece, which is good comedy, if one were to judge by the laugh reactions of the audience at a New York house.

The picture moves along at a rapid pace, with the melodies—and there are several "catchy" tunes, interjected reasonably, entertainingly, and ably rendered. Miss Eggerth is possessed of a rather capable singing voice, while the prince, played by Hermann Thimig, is equally adequate in the use of his tenor voice.

The princess rebels at the restrictions imposed upon her by her lady-in-waiting and the master of ceremonies, a pair of conjunctive roles, ably handled, which contribute not a little to the lively comedy. She is to be married to the prince, whom she has never seen, and of whom she conjures unflattering pictures. She runs away from her castle, only to jump into a carriage on the street when she sees the lady-in-waiting approaching in a castle coach. She flirts with the young, attractive man who returns at the moment to his cab in which she is hiding. The visiting card she takes from his pocket is that of a young lieutenant.

A meeting is arranged at a beer garden, and to her consternation she finds the wrong man, the right man seemingly busily engaged at another table with the fiancee of the young officer with whom she is dining. Complications, for the most part amusing, follow before it is all straightened out, melodiously. Where an adaptable audience is to be found, sell a lively, musically entertaining romance of mythical kingdoms with an attractive star, able support and amusing comedy.—AARONSON, New York.

A Study in Scarlet

(Fox)

Mystery

Once again the immortal sleuth-creation of the late brilliant Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, Sherlock Holmes, comes to the screen in a new impersonation. In this instance, from the studio of World Wide, Reginald Owen attempts to portray a Sherlock Holmes and does rather well by the role. He is, perhaps, physically a little too fit, being rounded and full bodied, which is not exactly the mental picture most of the millions of Doyle readers have conjured of the mighty "deducer."

Owen, however, is smooth and finished in his portrayal, and having himself written the dialogue and continuity, he handles his lines in the approved Holmes fashion. The story in this case has to do with the assorted murders within the "Scarlet Ring" of its members apparently under the direction of Alan Dinehart, notorious criminal attorney of London.

The extremely lengthy cast is good, carrying out in speech and action the tradition of Baker Street and the London atmosphere of the Sherlock Holmes mysteries. A bit of romance is woven into the work of Holmes as he unravels the mysteries of the strange and cold blooded murders after the Scotland Yard inspector is completely baffled. His methods are the Holmes methods, with Dr. Watson contributing his feeble attempts at powers of deduction.

Anna May Wong has a small but effective part as the supposed wife of one of the gang, while June Clyde, who enters the ring by inheritance after her father is killed, is dramatically capable when her life is endangered as her turn to die arrives. John Warburton, as her fiance, bring Holmes into the case and on the track of Dinehart.

One by one the members of the gang are murdered, in each case the crime made to look like suicide, since the money, according to the arrangement, is to be divided equally among all the members. The story on the whole moves at a rapid pace, but there are several slow spots which serve to halt the fast motion most desirable in such a film. The mystery technique is adequately handled, the plot moving to a logical and interesting conclusion, revealing that one of the members of the gang, thought murdered, is actually the perpetrator of the crimes, aided by Dinehart.

Sell the picture as an active, well-paced mystery melodrama of Sherlock Holmes and the famed story, "A Study in Scarlet." Let the origin of the story by Conan Doyle do much of the selling for the picture, enhancing that with lobby stills of the most active scenes from the picture, and bringing out, in copy, the romance angle, a hint or two of the plot, making as much as possible of the "Scarlet Ring" idea. In the story small ads, cryptically written, are placed in the classified columns of newspapers to warn the ring of approaching meetings. This idea carried over into the exhibitor's selling campaign on the film should be a valuable selling method.—AARONSON, New York.

Hell's Cargo

(Below the Sea)

Drama

Originally released as "Below the Sea" and playing the Rialto in New York under the title, this picture will be titled "Hell's Cargo" following the Rialto run, though exhibitors have the option of using either name. "Below the Sea" is not a particularly sparkling title, implying more a travel film than an active drama. While "Hell's Cargo" is considerably more lively as a name, it has the unfortunate inclusion of the world "hell," which is occasionally noted by exhibitors as not readily salable.

There is a fair portion of action in the picture, in addition to several excellent sequences of undersea photography. The two leading cast names should be reasonably effective marquee material, those of Ralph Bellamy, always a dependable and consistent performer, and Fay Wray. The others are relatively unimportant, with the possible exception of Fredrik Vogeding. Romance, action and drama bring the film slightly above the program classification, while the undersea work, with several bits in excellent color, may open the way for school tieups of one sort or another.

An introductory sequence pictures, with good dramatic effect, the sinking of a German U Boat in 1917 by one of the famed British mystery ships. The captain and first officer are the only survivors of the submarine and the only two who know that $3,000,000 in gold bullion lies at the bottom of the sea in the sunken submarine. The captain kills the officer before they are rescued, retaining a map of the location of the treasure, and then the story jumps to 1929.

Vogeding and Esther Howard, saloon keeper, plan to get the gold, and bring Bellamy, famous deep sea diver, into the plan. The ship is wrecked, Bellamy takes half the map and the two are necessarily partners. An undersea scientific expedition is fitted, sponsored by wealthy Miss Wray, and Vogeding and Bellamy sign on as officers with the intention of getting their gold.

The romance is carried by Bellamy and Miss Wray, he going out of his way to be surly and uncommunicative, she trying to break his resistance to her attentions. When Vogeding and Miss Howard, who had been found aboard as a stowaway, drug Bellamy and attempt to raise the gold themselves in the early morning, the climax of the picture strikes. Bellamy awakes, is about to pursue, when he learns that Miss Wray, with Paul Page, at the bottom in a diving bell, are floating helpless, the bell in the clutches of a giant octopus. Forgetting the gold, he goes below with an acetylene torch, kills the octopus in a rather exciting climax sequence and saves the occupants. The gold seekers, meanwhile, lose their gold at the last moment as the bottom of the chest breaks open, and Vogeding is drowned. Miss Wray and Bellamy complete the story in expected fashion.

The exhibitor has here drama, romance and unusual undersea action, combined with excellent scenic effects. The film may be sold as a lively, melodramatic story of a search for gold long buried in a sunken submarine, with emphasis on the punch sequence of the fight with the octopus.—AARONSON, New York.

Night and Day

(Gaumont-British)

Comedy with Music

This English-produced film is much more nearly a comedy with music than a musical comedy, since it has, basically, a conventional play-plot structure. However, musical interludes have been inserted, with neatness and dispatch, to lighten the fare, inject a bit of punch. The picture is entertaining, lively and amusing, centered almost in its entirety on Jack Hulbert, one of England's better known comedians, aided in particular by the equally well known Cicely Courtneidge.

These two race through their performances with a sure touch and smart handling, carrying the story with them. For the romance, Winifred Shotter and Hulbert supply the element satisfactorily, Miss Shotter being attractive and possessed of a rather sweet singing voice.

From the standpoint of regular run exhibition of the picture in this country, it must be noted that the film has a deal more liveliness and general rapidity of pace than the usual example of English production which reaches this country. Also, the cast is headed by two of the best known screen and stage comedians in England. How much that will mean for the regular run of American motion picture patrons, the individual exhibitor will have to decide for himself.

Hulbert, whose father is chief of Scotland Yard, joins the police force under an assumed name when his father refuses to permit him to join, believing he would not stick it out. He falls in love with Miss Shotter, incurs her displeasure when he warns her to drop her friendship with Francis Lister, leader of a gang of thieves. Amusing, lively episodes maintain the pace as Hulbert, with the aid of Miss Courtneidge, proprietress of a cafe, attempts to trap the gang, after he permitted them to slip through his fingers in a daring street robbery. The oddly assorted pair finally succeed in capturing the gang after laughable moments at night in a wax museum. The romance with Miss Shotter is resumed where it left off, of course.

Sell this as lively, entertaining comedy, spiced with a bit of song and dance executed neatly by Hulbert, Miss Shotter and Miss Courtneidge. It would be well not to emphasize too heavily the English origin of the film, since it should be found entertaining.—AARONSON, New York.

The Phantom of the Air

(Universal)

Action-Packed

In this new serial, produced by Adventure Pictures, released by Universal, the story takes to the air, with action, flying thrills and enough excitement to make any youngster, and perhaps a good many not so young, stand on their seats. The camera work is excellent, the flying of the best, and the story lively and well paced of the serial variety. It concerns an inventor, William Desmond, whose great device permitting planes to operate from his control board without a pilot, is the cause of the trouble, when scheming smugglers, led by LeRoy Mason, attempt to get it. The romance is supplied handily by Gloria Shea, as Desmond's daughter, and Tom Tyler, border patrol flyer employed by Desmond to test the plane. The first three chapters of the 12 are "The Great Air Meet," "The Secret of the Desert" and "The Avenging Phantom," which, if they are any sample of what is to come, should promise thrills and action to satisfy any serial fan, young or old. Each episode runs approximately 20 minutes.

Mickey's Pal Pluto

(United Artists)

Amusing

When Mickey's hound, Pluto, rescues a basket of kittens from the ice, he finds himself ignored at home as Mickey and Minnie lavish attention on them. First a tiny devil in his shape tempts him to run the kittens out of the house, then a tiny angel tempts him to play with them, all cleverly done in animated fashion. The angel wins, and the animated is amusing and entertaining, on a par with the rest of the series.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Stockholm

(Invincible)

Interesting

Interesting and educationally of value is this pictorial description of the attractive city of Stockholm, virtually the capital of the northern countries of Scandinavia. Seen are the inhabitants, the architecture and the amusement facilities of the chief city of Sweden, fine, modern and apparently unperturbed by the economic distress. An interesting study of a modern and little known city.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Fatal Glass of Beer

Fair

Silly, but at the same time fairly amusing, is this comedy in which W. C. Fields, as the hunter in the northern woods, sings the song of the fatal glass of beer, and the boy who was lured by temptation in the big city. A flash back shows the boy, Field's son, in the city, being tempted. Home again from prison, the boy repents and a surprise finish has a bit of a laugh. On the whole the comedy is hardly more than moderately entertaining.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Beau Best

(Universal)

Amusing

There is a fair amount of amusement in this Oswald cartoon, in which Oswald, on the desert, engages in combat to rescue a fair veiled damsel in distress. When the rescue is completed, he shyly lifts the veil—and realizes his mistake. Rather amusing as animateds go. —Running time, 6 minutes.

Beauty on Broadway

(Universal)

"Name" Appeal

The fact that Walter Winchell, of more or less journalistic fame, is the central figure of this subject, produced by Rowland-Brice for Universal, makes it reasonably appealing. Having to do with beauty contests, talent managers and choruses, it is at pains, like all the others, to emphasize Winchell's "drag" where Broadway moves. A slight story, only fair as material, is the reason for it all. As judges of the beauty contest are Nick Kenny, James Montgomery Flagg and other notable illustrators, whose appearance may be a selling factor.—Running time, 22 minutes.

Forty Thieves

Amusing

There is lively amusement in this number of the Terry-Toon series of animated cartoons, in which the young hero does battle with bandits on the desert, via a flying carpet, to save the animated young dancer. It is well synchronized and should be especially entertaining to the youngsters.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Art Jarrett

Weak

Universal, in this radio stars series, has a splendid selling idea, in that numerous of the famous radio stars, who are known to millions by voice, appear on the screen, but for the most part the stories used are inadequate. This instance is no exception. The star is Art Jarrett, radio singer, who urged by Nick Kenny, radio columnist, relates an adventure in Mexico, which is extremely weak in performance. Jarrett sings several numbers, pleasingly for those who like a high-pitched tenor.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Torchy Turns Turtle

Entertaining

Young Ray Cooke, as Torchy of the Educational series taken from the Sewell Ford stories of that name, is good fun, and obviously enjoys himself. As the office boy of Edmund Breese, with Franklin Pangborn as the stupid office manager, Torchy has himself reinstated and becomes a member of the boss's turtle lodge after he unwittingly and amusingly recovers the stolen plans for a new bomb which the boss planned to finance. These comedies are lively, entertaining and for the most part amusing.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Stage Preparing Summer Shows

The Group Theatre, planning several weeks of summer showings at Green Mansions, Warrensburg, N. Y., with a view to fall presentation, has five scripts which will be used. Among them is said to be "The Pure in Heart," by John Howard Lawson, tried out of New York by the Theatre Guild last winter, but not brought to Broadway.

On the list also are "Crisis," by Sidney S. Kingsley; "Fortune Heights," a new play by John Dos Passos; "Gold Eagle Guy," by Melvyn Levy; "Gallery Gods," a German play by Richard Duchinsky, adapted by Henrietta Malkiel and John Haussmann. The group also contemplates a new adaptation of Gerhart Hauptmann's "The Weavers."

Robert Edmund Jones has engaged numerous notable players for a revival of "The Merry Widow" at the Opera House, Central City, Colo., from August 5 to 19.

Infringement Cost Millions: Nizer

Ten millions of dollars are estimated as the price distributors are forced to pay annually as a result of infringement of the copyright law in illegal showing of films, Louis Nizer, attorney, told Federal Judge Francis Caffey in New York last week. Mr. Nizer was appearing for his clients, Educational and MGM, against the T. and K. Amusement Corp., operators of the American Movies theatre, New York, in an action charging copyright infringement by unauthorized holdover of three short subjects.

Educational charged that "Pigskin Capers" and "Jumping Beans" sold to the American Movies for one day, were illegally held a second day, while MGM made a similar charge on the "Glories of Nikko." Judge Caffey awarded the distributors $500 on each picture, plus court costs.

Publix Enterprises Drops Real Estate

Announcement late last week that Publix Enterprises will end all real estate operations as a result of a recommendation made by Irving Trust Company, trustee, proved to be the chief item of interest in the Paramount Publix bankruptcy situation the past week. The recommendation was made on the grounds that the best interests of creditors would be served by confining the activities of the bankrupt solely to theatre operations. Further events in the theatre situation at Paramount included the report on Monday that A. H. Blank is believed to be back in control of all first-runs in the Omaha territory as a result of a decision in federal court in turning the Orpheum over to States Theatre Company of Omaha the bankruptcy petition filed Monday in Tampa U. S. district court by the Sparks circuit of Florida and three other theatre corporations; and the appointment of Leon Netter, in charge of Publix film buying and booking, as assistant to Sam Dembow, Jr.

Late last week E. V. Richards, as receiver for Saenger Amusement Company, was granted certain authorizations in district court, New Orleans.

The cash position of Paramount is satisfactory and it is likely that new financing will not be required for the production program for the remainder of the year, the Protective Committee reported to the stockholders Wednesday.

Ralph A. Kohn, company treasurer, testified Wednesday at a creditors meeting that Paramount made a profit on its investments in Columbia Broadcasting System.

Artists' Bureau Awaits Control

Until President Roosevelt's industry control bill is actually enacted into law, the quick draft of the proposed Artists' Service Bureau to handle talent for all members of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America appears unlikely to receive much attention.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Bemidji, Minn.

DEAR HERALD:

We met an old friend here in Bemidji, Bill Bender. Bill used to fiddle for the Clint and Bessie Robbins Company all over Nebraska, Minnesota and South Dakota, and how that boy can fiddle. Bill insisted that we stay over for a couple of days and go fishing, and Bill never made a more sensible suggestion in his life. Did we stay? We did, and we sent the HERALD the proof of what we have always contended, that when it comes to fishing we don't lay down the rod for any man on earth. [And if proof is desired, just peek at that Ike Walton likeness in the pictorial section of the June 3 issue.—Ed.]

The town of Bemidji is located on Bemidji lake, where the Mississippi river empties into the lake, and it is a fisherman's paradise. This is the country where they catch the Muskies and northern pike, and if you want a place to fish come to Bemidji.

Bemidji has three theatres, one too many. Two of them are owned by Bennie Berger and the third, the Bemidji, is owned by Baehr Bros. We doubt if we have ever seen a finer theatre, in so small a town, than the Bemidji theatre.

There is nothing lacking in this theatre that would add to its comfort or beauty, and the projection is as good as we have ever seen and the sound is far superior to most of them. Bemidji ought to be proud of this theatre and its management and no doubt she is. We were sorry not to have met Mr. Berger, who owns the other two theatres, but we understand he lives in Minneapolis.

Fargo, N. D.

We drove into Fargo Friday night, expecting to cover North Dakota, and found that it had been raining over here for a straight week. It is reported that 27 mud turtles are mired down on their gumbo highways and the bullfrogs are climbing the telephone poles, so the next morning we turned around and drove right back into Minnesota.

C. L. Hiller of the Grand theatre at Crookston, Minn., is a showman of the old school. He has led bands for Ringling Bros. all over the country and has played practically every Chautauqua circuit in the country with his orchestra. The Grand was built originally for road shows and many of the headliners of former days have played there. Mr. Hiller has reconditioned the house for pictures and has made it into as fine a theatre as there is in the northwest. Crookston has three theatres, and like many other towns, it has one too many, but of course that's some more of Crookston's business.

E. G. Gannon of the Roxy theatre at Red Lake Falls is a hard working Gopher and he digs in whether it is winter or summer. He is remodeling his theatre and putting it into shape for the coming season, and if the wheat matures around Red Lake Falls, as it looks like it will, and the wheat gamblers don't get control of the market, business ought to be good in that part of the state.

A. M. Nolte and Mrs. A. M. Nolte are purveying entertainment at the Avalon theatre in Thief River Falls for the Gophers of Northern Minnesota. The theatre draws customers for many miles around, due partly to the beauty and comfort of the Avalon, but largely because of the popularity of Mr. and Mrs. Nolte. Andy and Herb Anderson of Detroit Lakes are joint owners with Mr. Nolte in this theatre. The Avalon is another one of the beauty spots of this wheat belt, and you can set a trap on any highway leading into Thief River Falls on any show night and you will catch a Gopher headed for the Avalon.

We wish the theatre boys would stop calling us "Grandpa." If it hadn't been for such men as we are what could Pershing have done over in the Argonne that time? Jevver think of that?

O. S. Nordine is the editor and publisher and printer's devil of a paper in Karstad. He also operates the Karstad theatre two nights a week.

He says if his printing press don't break down he thinks he can keep the show going until huckleberries are ripe. He gives it as his opinion that a showman should have the HERALD even though he runs only one show a month. You will find newspaper men of that same opinion all over the country. That's why they are leaders in their community.

Ortonville, Minn.

We stopped here to spend Sunday because it is located on Big Stone lake and we thought we might find time to go out and catch a sunfish, but this morning when we woke up it was pouring down rain just like it did two years ago when we Sundayed here. Gosh-all-fishhooks. This is the place where Elmer Gaily, of Wayne, Nebraska, comes every year to have his picture taken with a lot of studio bass.

Bill Gowan of the Orpheum theatre here is playing "Forty-second Street," and of course, with a picture like that, he'd have to butt into a rainstorm. We expect Bill will lay it all to us.

At Thief River Falls we met A. S. Clatsworthy, an old friend of ours, who is peddling film for MGM. A. S. has a fine lodge and motor boat over on Leach lake which he placed at our disposal any time we cared to go over there and use them. Wasn't that swell of him? These film boys are mighty swell fellows (about 20% of 'em) and that's why we are strong for 'em.

J. R. Ullman of the Orpheum at Ada says he'd as soon think of going without beer as he would without the HERALD. That boy's mental condition has been developed along with his physical. Some are not equally balanced that way. That's why some don't make a success of the show business. J. R. will be operating his show while some others we know of will be operating a manure spreader.

We found Fredrick and Schrieber of the Grand theatre at Breckenridge both busy when we called. Fredrick was making some picture frames and Schrieber was nursing a severe case of lumbago. We asked Schrieber how he came to have lumbago and he said they had just finished running "So This Is Africa," and we told him he had gotten off easy, that Bill Bowker, over in Dunlap, Iowa, played the picture and he said the whole town had had the summer complaint ever since.

Mike De Fee of the Grand at Wheaton has been under the impression that he could play golf. We stopped there yesterday and he framed up a foursome. He matched us with the editor of the local paper against himself and another guy and we played for a couple of bottles of Minnesota "prosperity." Mike and his partner were shy thirty cents apiece, but that was due to the editor pulling us out of the hole, for the editor would lay 'em right down the fairway while we played all the creeks.

When you take "Pfunder's Tablets" for a sour stomach you want to be sure to have a room with a bathroom attachment. Pluto Water hasn't a darn thing on Pfunder.

What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Columbia

AIR HOSTESS: Evalyn Knapp—Uusual midweek business on this one. My people seemed to like it. Played May 23-24.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

AIR HOSTESS: Evalyn Knapp, James Murray, Thelma Todd—Made mistake of playing this in small house. Regardless, it outgrossed our big house, and proved a freak puller at the box office. Well done and the paper is good.—Archie Miller, Grand Theatre, Devils Lake, N. D.

AS THE DEVIL COMMANDS: Alan Dinehart, Mae Clarke, Neil Hamilton—A good picture that did not draw. Rain. Played April 17-18.—A. B. Jeffries, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

CHILD OF MANHATTAN: John Boles, Nancy Carroll—Another one that does not add any prestige nor money at the box office. Nancy Carroll overacts and John Boles seemed to be bored to death in some of the scenes. The reaching for comedy and the hysterical moaning about the baby was just a plain pain in the neck to the audience. Brains seem to be lacking in Hollywood this year, judging from some of the pictures they are turning out. I am telling the world that next season is going to be more critical than this one has been. There have been too many poor pictures that have not had the tendency to build up patronage. There is just one ray of hope creeping through the clouds and that is the decision to make musicals. But they will have to be good and in color.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

CHILD OF MANHATTAN: John Boles, Nancy Carroll—Here is a good Columbia picture with drawing power. Dialogue plenty hot. We would suggest that Columbia cool down on smut before the censors make them. But in spite of the smut, good drawing picture and pleased the general patronage, even if the picture in spots made the ladies blush. Running time, 70 minutes. Played May 22-23.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

FORBIDDEN TRAIL: Buck Jones—A good western with more comedy than usual. Usual business. Played May 19-20.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

NO MORE ORCHIDS: Carole Lombard, Lyle Talbot—Here is a picture that would be a "super-special" if any other company had it. Our people went for it big, especially the second night. Columbia treats you right on price and quality.—John Chapek, Annex Theatre, Anamoose, N. D. Small town patronage.

STATE TROOPER: Regis Toomey, Evalyn Knapp—If you want something different and a picture that will please 100%, this picture will do it. Regis Toomey and Evalyn Knapp had the audience laughing most of the time. There is plenty of action. It makes a dandy Saturday night story. Played May 11-12.—A. M. Beare, Gem Theatre, Chester, Ill. General patronage.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND: Lee Tracy—Can see why Liberty Magazine gives this four stars. A great picture, well liked, and fairly well attended. A little old, but should do well if properly advertised. Played May 2.—A. B. Jeffries, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

WHEN STRANGERS MARRY: Jack Holt—Here is a very nice program picture. Full of thrills and a dandy for Saturday night, with plenty of action. On account of school entertainment, we had a poor house, but those who did come in spoke very nice of the picture. Running time, seven reels. Played May 24.—A. M. Beare, Gem Theatre, Chester, Ill. General patronage.

WHITE EAGLE: Buck Jones, Barbara Weeks—Very good Indian picture. Fine for Friday and Saturday.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

First National

FRISCO JENNY: Ruth Chatterton—Very good picture. It drew only average. Chatterton's acting is marvelous but the tragic ending leaves a bad taste in the mouth. Played May 25-26.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

FRISCO JENNY: Ruth Chatterton—Very good all around picture.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

LILLY TURNER: Ruth Chatterton, George Brent—Disregarding her dignity and sophistication, shedding her code of morals, Ruth Chatterton returns to character portrayals which will eventually surpass her standard versatility achieved during her reign on the screen when she was recognized and publicized as the first lady on the screen. Ideally co-starred with George Brent, both give a striking presentation of their individual characters, which will improve their widely spreading popularity by the males as well as the females of the cinematic followers. Frank McHugh, that now internationally famed funster with his incomparable comic notions, is a central figure in the photoplay, providing numerous laugh-laden situations combined with humorous dialogue. To him belong honors for keeping the picture on an entertaining basis which otherwise may have proven a slowly circulating melodrama. McHugh's work is always acceptable in this territory. An equally efficient supporting cast consisting of Guy Kibbee, Robert Barat, Gordon Wescott and others strengthening the structure with their readily acceptable work. William Wellman adds another leaf to his wreath of laurels for his directorial work, with splendid camera work by his technicians sharing honors from that standpoint. First National is doing their bit to improve business possibilities in all territories. If releases continue in this manner, the shears are ready for old man depression's execution with a substitution of little baby business, eager to start the ball rolling on the floor of our depressed film market. Running time, 62 minutes. Played May 14-15-16-17.—William Dabb, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pa. Small town patronage.

THE LITTLE GIANT: Edward G. Robinson, Mary Astor—Well, boys, here I come, and giving Warner Bros. more credit for putting out another great hit. Can you imagine Robinson as a comedian. Robinson as a gangster is great, but as a comedian he is a knockout. If you want something to make you forget troubles see Robinson as "The Little Giant" and you will give First National a great hand for putting out such a hit. They can't fail to click. If only First National keeps it up, their exhibitors won't have to worry about the summer. We are waiting for their big hit, "Gold Diggers of 1933." Here's hoping it is a great success. Running time, 67 minutes. Played May 29-29-30-31.—William Dabb, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pa. Small town patronage.

SILVER DOLLAR: Edward G. Robinson—A good picture with fine acting that was well liked. Hooked up with the high school on this, and make a little money. Played April 24-25.—A. B. Jeffries, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

Fox

ADORABLE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Garat—From a standpoint of beautifully produced on a most lavish scale, this was wonderful, but the saccharine type story was not liked by the majority. This new bird Garat is nothing to cause the femmes to leave home, although he can sing. Gaynor is very adorable, as usual, but biz was just one-half her former draw. Picture, like most of Gaynor's, is clean, and that's something. Running time, 85 minutes.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

AFTER THE BALL: Esther Ralston—I have played 24 of Fox's '32-'33 product, and this is the first poor one. This picture might be OK across the pond, but not in the U. S. A. Running time, 72 minutes. Played April 21-22.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and rural patronage.

BROADWAY BAD: Joan Blondell, Ricardo Cortez—Poor drawing power but average in entertainment value. Blondell does not draw for me. Played May 16-17.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

CAVALCADE: Clive Brook, Diana Wynyard—A first rate production from every angle but the dialogue, which, being British, causes it to lose its value to American audiences. It will not break any attendance records with the average American theatre. Why waste such tremendous efforts, we don't want it and won't swallow that lingo in a thousand years. A little big picture. Played May 22-24.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

FACE IN THE SKY: Spencer Tracy—Good program picture.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

HELLO SISTER: James Dunn, Boots Mallory, Minna Gombell, Zasu Pitts—They must be pretty hard up for story material to produce this. Another like this and Jimmy will be one of the has beens, and Boots will slip before she gets started, and if they don't clean pictures up mighty quickly we will take the toboggan with the players. I was not in sight when my patrons went out. Played May 18-19.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

HELLO SISTER: James Dunn—A program picture that got over to average business. About same grade as "Me and My Gal." Zasu Pitts helps the picture.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

HOT PEPPER: Victor McLaglen, Edmund Lowe, Lupe Velez—Pretty good stuff, not as rough as I thought it was going to be. And glad of it. Business way off.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

HUMANITY: Ralph Morgan, Boots Mallory, Alexander Kirkland—A very ordinary program picture. It's clean but not much to it. Played May 17.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

ROBBERS' ROOST: George O'Brien—Zane Grey stories appeal to the public. Give us big westerns like this and they get the business. Westerns are not dead by any means, all they need is to be produced on a big scale and a little money spent in producing them and they will still get the business. We need westerns, but just ordinary westerns won't go any more. "Robbers' Roost" gets the business and pleases.—Guy W. Johnson, Johnson Theatre, Bowman, N. D. General patronage.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—A fine, clean picture that will please once they are in your theatre. A credit to any house. You won't go wrong in booking this one.—Guy W. Johnson, Johnson Theatre, Bowman, N. D. General patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers—Not as good as "Down to Earth." Not much to the picture. It's slow and draggy. But all said and done, Rogers has a following that very few stars have. This picture is all Rogers, made without much cost to the producer. It will get the Rogers fans, but will not please them all.—Guy W. Johnson, Johnson Theatre, Bowman, N. D. General patronage.

THE WARRIOR'S HUSBAND: Elissa Landi, Ernest Truex, Marjorie Rambeau, David Manners—Personally thought this well done and funny in spots, but most patrons did not. Draw very poor, but a flash of photos, heralds and paper told me in advance we would get a crop of hay wet. However, you never can tell how they are going to take something different and we can't blame producers for trying. Running time, 75 minutes. Played May 14.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

THE WARRIOR'S HUSBAND: Elissa Landi, Ernest Truex—Great entertainment. A little of the money spent on putting "Cavalcade" on the map would have made this vastly more important to an American audience, especially the men. A big little picture. Played May 24-25.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

ZOO IN BUDAPEST: Loretta Young, Gene Raymond—Splendid and entirely different from anything we have had. Whole thing takes place in the zoo and it is one of the most picturesque ever made. Many commented on the perfect photography. It drew only average but pleased all classes. It is worthy of extra effort on your part. First half rather draggy but there is much action in the last half, when the animals are released from their cages by an elephant. Played May 23-24.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

MGM

CLEAR ALL WIRES: Lee Tracy—This is a one-man show and Lee Tracy is it. Might click if Tracy is popular in your town. It was his first appearance here and the slim audience seemed to consider it an overdose. Most of the supporting cast spoke with an exaggerated Russian accent which at times was impossible to understand.—Mrs. Howard Maylor, Oak Harbor Theatre, Oak Harbor, Wash. General patronage.

GABRIEL OVER THE WHITE HOUSE: Walter Huston, Karen Morley—Personally, I enjoyed the picture, although it did only an average business in one of my theatres. It is well produced and takes a long stride into a new field for entertainment. Many will not like the way the role of our President is handled in the early part of the picture. However, it packs a mighty wallop as it gets under way. It puts the gangster on the spot and paints him as the dirty rat that he is. Politicians come in for plenty of wallops that will get a big hand from the folks back home. A little more of the spotlight on how our government is operated and how politicians betray the trust of the people that sent them to Washington, it will arouse a national interest in cleaner politics.—B. P. McCormick, Rialto Theatre, Florence, Col. Small town patronage.

GABRIEL OVER THE WHITE HOUSE: Walter Huston, Karen Morley—Opened this on the first day our village went under daylight saving time. My best wishes and a dose of arsenic to the guy who thought up daylight saving. "Gabriel" needs to be run several days to derive full box-office benefit. It pleases and builds by word-of-mouth advertising. I was at a loss to know how to pre-sell it. There are no names and the title is not an attention-getter.—Mrs. Howard Maylor, Oak Harbor Theatre, Oak Harbor, Wash. General patronage.

LOOKING FORWARD: Lionel Barrymore—Here is your picture. Interior set of an office, few shots of a department store. Half a dozen old men and a young couple. Entire nine reels consumed by talking business depression. No drawing power and no entertainment. Just another picture. Running time, 87 minutes. Played May 25-26.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MADE ON BROADWAY: Robert Montgomery, Sally Eilers—Very good picture. It drew a little better than average and pleased well, and that is what we are looking for. Played May 21-22.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

PROSPERITY: Marie Dressler, Polly Moran—They turn out for Marie Dressler, but the story has been done in two of their pictures before. There is the son and the daughter and the usual quarrels between the mothers that have been the theme on all of this pair's pictures. From the reaction that I got from the audiences that saw it, they were a little disappointed in the picture. The picture was too much like some of the others, and frankly, I think Marie Dressler needs Wally Beery with her and not Polly Moran. There is no question but what Marie Dressler is the top drawing card but she does need a better picture than this one.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

RASPUTIN AND THE EMPRESS: Ethel, John and Lionel Barrymore—A-1. The most outstanding production so far produced. Outranks them all in everything excepting appeal of subject matter. Being a story of Russia, Russians and the revolution, its drawing power will not equal some others. It will hold them if you get them in. Played May 14-16.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

SON DAUGHTER: Ramon Novarro, Helen Hayes—No good for theatres in the United States. Might go good in China.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

STRANGE INTERLUDE: Norma Shearer, Clark Gable—This is a butter-and-egg community located on an island and I was a little afraid "Strange Interlude" might prove a trifle spicy for farmer tastes. Drew fairly well, however, and caused much argument pro and con, which helped the cash box.—Mrs. Howard Maylor, Oak Harbor Theatre, Oak Harbor, Wash. General patronage.

TARZAN, THE APE MAN: Johnny Weissmuller—I played this as a repeat booking in place of another Metro which I did not want to play. Ran it on Saturday and was astonished at the crowds. I thought everybody saw it when I ran it the first time. This makes me think that other exhibitors might do well to play this again. The print was in good condition (from the New Orleans exchange). Played May 20.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

TODAY WE LIVE: Joan Crawford—A keen disappointment. Not the Joan of old. Someone should tip her off to be herself and not appear to imitate Hepburn, Garbo, etc. Come on, Joan, be yourself and give us that old devil-may-care type for which you are so worthy. Don't be so serious and high-hat. Thanks, we know you will. Running time, 113 minutes. Played May 7.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

WHAT! NO BEER?: Buster Keaton, Jimmy Durante—We have a little city of about 5,000 and a good number of churches and church people, such as you would expect to find in the average little city. The business we did on this picture would indicate that it will not break any records and that it will fall below expectations in many places. It is intended to be a lot of fun over more and better beer that was being sold as near beer. Do not believe it will offend and will please many—if you can get them in.—B. P. McCormick, Jones Theatre, Canon City and Rialto Theatre, Florence, Col. Small town patronage.

WHAT! NO BEER?: Buster Keaton, Jimmy Durante—Like Laurel and Hardy, Keaton has nearly killed his drawing power here through long, tiresome sequences whereby he tangles and untangles himself in the scenery, or whatever is handy. In this picture he wades endlessly through gallons of beer. Very funny, very funny. Keaton has something to sell. He's a clever acrobat. Will someone please remind him?—Mrs. Howard Maylor, Oak Harbor Theatre, Oak Harbor, Wash. General patronage.

WHITE SISTER: Helen Hayes, Clark Gable—Failed to draw. Said it was too sad. Acting okay. Too many church scenes not necessary to story which slowed up the picture.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

Paramount

A BEDTIME STORY: Maurice Chevalier—Just a stretched-out "Our Gang" with an outstanding baby grabbing the grapes. Draw nothing, but that's not surprising as "Mawress" has been washed up for some time with us. Tuneful little songs and nothing offensive. Helen Twelvetrees does not help it. Running time, 87 minutes. Played April 30.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

CRIME OF THE CENTURY: Stuart Erwin, Frances Dee—Another murder mystery from Paramount with new angles and twist. But the people are fed up on murder stories, regardless of how the killing is done. The producers should turn to something more pleasant. Running time, 75 minutes. Played May 24.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

THE DEVIL IS DRIVING: Edmund Lowe—Played this one late, but good pictures like this one will bring them in any time. Running time, 70 minutes. Played May 26-27.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and rural patronage.

FROM HELL TO HEAVEN: Jack Oakie, Carole Lombard—Pleasing entertainment for them all. The Hell in the title will lessen its drawing power with the family and children. Just another dirty collar on a clean shirt. Played May 26-27.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

HORSEFEATHERS: Four Marx Brothers. We liked this picture because it made us some money. Several came to see it the second night. First time the Marx Bros. have played this town, but we assure you it won't be the last time. Many favorable comments and they went out laughing. Had a bad rain the first night. Played May 4-5.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

IF I HAD A MILLION: All star—Had bad breaks on this picture. First night a tent show and the annual senior class play for opposition, very cloudy second night, so did not make any money, but it's one fine picture. With good weather and no opposition we would have made money. Played May 11-12.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

A LADY'S PROFESSION: Alison Skipworth—A program picture that seemed to please those who saw it. Average business.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN: Jack Oakie, Marian Nixon—A nice fight picture that did not draw the women. Several patrons told me that it was a mistake that the old-time fighters in the picture were not advertised. Flopped at box office. Played April 13-14.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd—Cannot give a real report on this one, as the water was nine feet over the highway, and crowds could not get in. Personally thought it was fine, and the few that saw it liked it. Played April 20-21.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

NIGHT AFTER NIGHT: George Raft—This star is not known here. Picture did not draw, but it was a fine picture. Well advertised but no box office biz. Played April 27-28.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

NIGHT OF JUNE 13TH: Clive Brook, Lila Lee—Many of our cash customers said that this was the best picture we have shown since our opening April 6th. Clear weather, but did not draw because of high school commencement and exercises. Played May 18-19.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

THE STORY OF TEMPLE DRAKE: Miriam Hopkins, Jack LaRue—This is taken from William Faulkner's novel "Sanctuary," the most terrible story ever written in the English language. I did not know that the film was based on this story, or I surely would have paid for it without running same. I advise all exhibitors to send the exchange a check for this film and leave it alone. I congratulate George Raft for refusing to take the part of Trigger. I am surprised Paramount bought the story rights and made it into a picture. I am surprised that it passed the censor board. Paramount has given us many splendid pictures this year, and it is just too bad to have a fine organization stoop to this low level. If the members of Congress were to read this story "Sanctuary," and then also know that this class of material is forced on to the innocent public, it would put an end to block booking. Why Motion Picture Herald should give this film a fair report is beyond me. Surely, the reviewer never read the book. When the ten worst pictures are listed, this will rank at the very bottom. Paramount should pull it from the market, as they have a splendid record this season. Played May 14-15-16.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Small city and rural patronage.

RKO

ANIMAL KINGDOM: Ann Harding, Leslie Howard—A very clever story but one that does not appeal to the regular guys. The regular fans turn up their noses at a picture like this. And you can hardly blame them. It's draggy, could be told very nicely in a couple of reels. And even then I wouldn't want to have to sit through it.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

COME ON DANGER: Tom Keene—Tom Keene is good, so are the singing cowboys. People like the cowboy songs and they are real good. A nice picture, but Keene is not well enough known here to draw them in. What Keene needs is a Western made on a big scale, with old time fiddling, songs and dances injected. Put in plenty dough and insert good, clean comedy with his action and you have a picture that will do business in any man's town.—Guy W. Johnson, Johnson Theatre, Bowman, N. D. General patronage.

THE GREAT JASPER: Richard Dix, Wera Engels—RKO had better take a tumble to themselves with this star Dix and let him be his age. He does not fit in as the great lover. Philandering around in the first place, he lacks definitely the "It" that a part of this kind should have and furthermore, this boy is getting on in life, and in these parts such as "The Great Jasper" he is woefully miscast. And the box office showed it. They came, they saw the first night, they stayed away, that's the story of "The Great Jasper." Right now he and RKO are living on the success of "Cimarron." But that picture put the other star, Irene Dunne, close to the top. And Dix was the flash in the pan.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind.—General patronage.

THE GREAT JASPER: Richard Dix—No good. Dix is fast fading.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

HALF NAKED TRUTH: Lee Tracy, Lupe Velez—Tracy goes over in this town. Another good one from RKO. Everybody who saw this picture thought it was fine. Played May 15-16.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

THE HALF NAKED TRUTH: Lee Tracy—Good program picture.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

KING KONG: Fay Wray, Bruce Cabot—What 99 exhibitors out of 100 are interested in is the receipts or drawing power of a picture. This one has exceptional drawing power. The first night, seats oversold; second night, seats sold or occupied, 95%; third night almost as good, but many children all three nights. In assessing the merits of this picture, it does not require much strain on the memory to recall First National's ape picture in which, with much ballyhoo, a great man ape had broken loose, climbing into high story windows and terrifying a whole city. This is a much larger ape than that of First National and a much longer ape. In short, it seems that First National had a jack-in-the-box and RKO came along and sprung the lid of the box. However, it would not be fair to fail to state that RKO has improved the original picture. Incidentally, after much lurid advertisement they have produced or revised a picture which speaks for itself. And it paid. Played May 21-22-23.—A. J. Gibbons, Illinois Theatre, Metropolis, Ill. General patronage.

KING KONG: Fay Wray, Bruce Cabot—Two years ago, before the avalanche of freak and what have you cycle, this would have been great box office. From a production standpoint, it was a marvel. However, the expose of "How it was done" in so many of the fan mags helped kill it. Why don't they do something to keep these wise "tippers off" muzzled, it surely is bad business. Played May 2-3.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

KING KONG: Fay Wray, Bruce Cabot—Radio broadcast helped put this picture over. It's a picture that the public has heard about and want to see. A picture after you once see it, is enough. But that once is enough to fill your house. It's a freak picture and people go more for this than anything else. Would advise anyone to book this picture as it will make you money. Played May 26-27.—Guy W. Johnson, Johnson Theatre, Bowman, N. D. General patronage.

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE: Mitzi Green—Here was a pleasant surprise. Broke our house record, with exception of opening night. If you have not played this, put it in on a Saturday. More kids than ever before. It's a dandy. Played May 6-7.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

LUCKY DEVILS: Bill Boyd—Very entertaining picture, with lots of action and a few laughs.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

NO OTHER WOMAN: Irene Dunne, Charles Bickford—Miss Dunne is excellent, but there is not much to the story. One that has been overworked. Just a fair program picture. It's clean, nothing objectionable. Our patrons expect a better story for Miss Dunne, and were disappointed in this. Played May 20.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

NO OTHER WOMAN: Irene Dunne, Charles Bickford—Nice little picture, with action and some suspense. Seemed to please. I think that if there was more suspense in the pictures today that they would go over better.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

PENGUIN POOL MURDER: Edna May Oliver—A very swell picture. Edna is always welcome here. Personally think she is about the most entertaining person on the screen today. Picture spoiled with the title. That murder stuff don't go so good. Parents keep the kids home, and stay there themselves.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

SAILOR BE GOOD: Jack Oakie—Just not there, that's all. My patrons don't care for him. Let your competitor have this and you will profit by it. Nuff said.—Guy W. Johnson, Johnson Theatre, Bowman, N. D. General patronage.

United Artists

CYNARA: Ronald Colman—Just a picture. Rather draggy. English story, and with all respect to the English people, it seems that these stories will not go over.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

CYNARA: Ronald Colman—Well produced and well acted—but—what a beautiful "nose dive" it took in both of my towns. It may be a big bet in some of the larger cities, but on the other hand, I believe this picture will prove what a vast lot of people in the average town do not care for and that the doings of high society in many ways proves of little interest to the average movie fan (that fan we call mass patronage—the backbone of the box office receipts). And that in reality much of this high life and superpolish is just another pain in the neck. The fact is that millions and millions of radio fans have found joy and happiness in listening to the plain and simple, the human side of life, as portrayed by "Seth Parker" and his family of friends away up yonder around "Jonesport," also the national interest that can be aroused and sustained in the simple life of "a fresh air taxi driver." There is nothing high tone, high hat or super-fine about Amos and Andy or Seth Parker. It's a thought worth remembering, if you want to reach and please the greatest number of people. The box office will experience new life when producers and directors remember what the American family likes.—B. P. McCormick, Jones Theatre, Canon City, and Rialto Theatre, Florence, Col. Small town patronage.

THE KID FROM SPAIN: Eddie Cantor—A box office natural, played to good business in Florence and Canon City. If you can buy it right (which has not always been an easy job in dealing with United Artists) then advertise it, you will do the business. —B. P. McCormick, Jones Theatre, Canon City and Rialto Theatre, Florence, Col. Small town patronage.

Universal

BE MINE TONIGHT: Foreign make, with Jan Kiepura, Magda Schneider—This picture is all O.K. but nothing to rave about. We couldn't get them in at all. No stars to advertise. No names on the advertising at all. I can't see why the Universal charges such high prices for pictures like this. If you enjoy good singing, the Polish opera star can certainly entertain you with good A1 singing. May 21-22.—A. M. Beare, Gem Theatre, Chester, Ill. General patronage.

THE COHENS AND KELLYS IN TROUBLE: George Sidney, Charles Murray—Best picture these two ever made. It packed them in for us and should do so for anybody anywhere. Lots of real comedy climaxed by the boat runaway around the harbor that had 'em standing on their feet. Get this sure. played May 26.—Amuzu Theatre, Inc., Inman, S. C. General patronage.

THE COHENS AND KELLYS IN TROUBLE: Charles Murray, George Sidney—A lifesaver for any small town. Just what we need at this time. Running time, 70 minutes. Played May 28-29.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and rural patronage.

THE KISS BEFORE THE MIRROR: Frank Morgan, Nancy Carroll, Paul Lukas—Everybody came out spoke very nicely of this one. It's a pleasure to stand at the door and have people praise the picture. Frank Morgan is certainly one man who is making ground very fast, he plays a wonderful part. Nancy Carroll plays her small part very well. Grab it, you won't go wrong. Played May 7-8.—A. M. Beare, Gem Theatre, Chester, Ill. General patronage.

THE KISS BEFORE THE MIRROR: Frank Morgan, Nancy Carroll, Paul Lukas—Here's a good picture. Lukas kills his unfaithful wife at the beginning, goes to prison, usual courtroom scene. Frank Morgan gives an unusual performance as the attorney for Lukas, and husband of Miss Carroll. Regardless of the fact that we have had many along this line, it's a little different and holds interest throughout. Lukas is a wonderful actor, but is a little hard to understand. Played May 21-22.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

THE MUMMY: Boris Karloff—Karloff is good. But who the heck can see any entertainment in a story like this. Imagine a mummy coming to life after being dead thousands of years. Even the kids couldn't swallow it.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

THE OLD DARK HOUSE: Boris Karloff, Gloria Stuart—For the first time in years we have a cast made up exclusively of actors, and each one with an outstanding role. The story is shivery, thrill-packed, and all the rest of the usual adjectives, but it isn't absurdly impossible like the too-long series of horror tales we have already suffered under; these people are really alive. Wish Gloria Stuart didn't comb her hair so tightly, aside from that she is very restful to the eyes. Business fell off a little on this. People would rather be amused than scared to death nowadays. Played May 16-17.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Warner

42ND STREET: All Star—No matter where you are your patrons have all heard of this and can hardly wait until opening time to see it. I wish we had more pictures with the drawing power this has. I have heard a few people say that it did not come up to their expectations, but nobody failed to get his money's worth. Be sure to run this picture. You owe it to your patrons. Also to your box office. Played May 28-29.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

HARD TO HANDLE: James Cagney, Mary Brian, Ruth Donnelly—Splendid for this type, which is fast moving comedy. Ruth Donnelly is a great entertainer and she divides the honors with Cagney in this one. Played May 18-19.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

HAUNTED GOLD: John Wayne—Another good western picture from Warner. Story concerns an old deserted gold mine. Plenty of action and also mystery. Business good as Wayne has good drawing power here. Entire audience well pleased, especially the children. We should have more like this one. Running time, 59 minutes. Played May 27.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

I AM A FUGITIVE FROM A CHAIN GANG: Paul Muni—Too depressing. Several women walked out on this. Drew fairly well, considering Lent and rain. Played April 10-11.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

MYSTERY OF THE WAX MUSEUM: A wonderful picture in color that was a pleasure to run from the box office viewpoint. Rather horrible, and it will not do to play too many pictures of this kind. It created a lot of talk in town, both for and against the picture, but talk about any picture, good or bad, is what we want. Some kids were scared and left before the show was over. Personally I recommend this picture very highly. Played May 22-23.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

PARACHUTE JUMPER: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr. —A good picture, but did not draw. Think Doug's family affairs hurt him. Right thinking people can't go for that stuff.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

RIDE HIM COWBOY: John Wayne—The biggest flop we have had. About $10.00 for two nights. In addition, the film had loose patches, and was in bad shape. This is unusual, as Warner Brothers films are usually in excellent condition. Western pictures not liked here. Played May 8-9.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

Short Subjects

Columbia

COLLEGE GIGOLOS: Sunrise Comedy—Too raw. Fairly funny.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

CURIOSITIES No. 237—Only fair entertainment. Not as good as the last one of this series. If the rest of this series are as bad as this, Columbia should discontinue them. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HIS VACATION: Sunrise Comedy—One of the best two-reelers we have played. Really has some funny spots. The story is about heavy rain, and we played it at a time when we had nine feet of water over the main highway here, so the picture drew a lot of comments on that alone.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

LADIES NOT ALLOWED: Lambs Gambols—Not so hot. These comedies may do for big cities, but not for my town.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

SHAVE IT WITH MUSIC: Lambs Gambols—The best of these comedies we have played. Fred and Dorothy Stone save what would otherwise be a tragedy as a comedy.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

MGM

ASLEEP IN THE FEET: Zasu Pitts, Thelma Todd—Don't know but what this was a little better than their average. Zasu is a scream.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

FISH HOOKY: Our Gang—Very good. Some of the old gang members are in this, Mary Kornman, Micky Daniels, Farina and Joe Cobb. Two reels.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

HOT SPOT: Taxi Boys—Silly. We show to few children and our adults dislike such idiotic guff.—Mrs. Howard Maylor, Oak Harbor, Oak Harbor Theatre, Wash. General patronage.

A LAD AND A LAMP: Our Gang—Another "Our Gang" comedy. This is the best comedy that they have made this season. Full of laughs and will please adults as well as children. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LAUREL AND HARDY: These stars actually have kept trade away and have spent too much footage in senseless and tiresomely repeated falls and entanglements, but "Their First Mistake," which I sneaked over on my customers May 12 and 13, surprised me speechless by having practically no such sequences. Several patrons told me, "That's the first time I ever enjoyed a comedy by those two."—Mrs. Howard Maylor, Oak Harbor Theatre, Oak Harbor, Wash. General patronage.

ODDITIES and SPORT CHAMPIONS: Single reels and all we have used have been splendid. "Swing High" and "Snow Birds" actually brought some folks back a second time.—Mrs. Howard Maylor, Oak Harbor Theatre, Oak Harbor, Wash. General patronage.

OVER THE COUNTER and HOLLYWOOD PREMIERE: These all-color musicals bring good comment, and are an entertaining addition to any program.—Mrs. Howard Maylor, Oak Harbor Theatre, Oak Harbor, Wash. General patronage.

SWING HIGH: Sport Champions Series—Trapeze performers. Good filler on any program. Mostly in slow motion.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Paramount

ALOHA OE: Screen Song—One of the poorest of this series. Hawaiians not as good as usual, both their playing and singing.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

DINAH: Mills Bros.—Another screen song with the bouncing ball. Very good comedy and music. The Mills Brothers pleased all with their playing and singing. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

RKO

BUBBLES AND TROUBLES: Aesop Fable—Not much to this one. Not nearly up to their standard. —D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

THE MERCHANT OF MENACE: Edgar Kennedy—Here is one Kennedy picture that sure keeps the ha-ha's coming fast. Is good clean fun, and Kennedy sure knows how to bring out the best laughs. It's great.—A. M. Beare, Gem Theatre, Chester, Ill. General patronage.

Universal

BREVITIES: We used, or rather, previewed two of these, "The Runt Page" and "The Good Old Days." Awful, just plain awful.—Mrs. Howard Maylor, Oak Harbor Theatre, Oak Harbor, Wash. General patronage.

I KNOW EVERYBODY AND EVERYBODY'S RACKET: Walter Winchell, Radio Star Reels—Just fair. Orchestra music so loud it drowned the dialogue.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

I KNOW EVERYGODY AND EVERYBODY'S RACKET: Walter Winchell—Very good. Two reels. —Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

BROADWAY BREVITIES: The best shorts on the market. Will make a poor show good and a good show better. Will fill in on any feature. They are better than a lot of features. My patrons like them. All musical and a big majority are in color.—Guy W. Johnson, Johnson Theatre, Bowman, N. D. General patronage.

BYGONES: Ruth Etting—Ruth Etting is the whole show. Poor story but musical numbers are very good. Not up to the standard Broadway Brevity. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

A GREAT BIG BUNCH OF YOU: Merry Melody —Very good musical cartoon. When it comes to cartoons and music, Warner Brothers have the best. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

THE MEAL TICKET: Jack Pearl—About the worst piece of junk ever thrown on the market. Recording so poor it was hardly understandable. Not a good laugh in it. Shame on you, Vitaphone.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

Serials

Universal

THE JUNGLE MYSTERY: Tom Tyler—For the first time in 14 years I am pulling off a serial before it is half played, and this is it. Too many horrible jungle animals and noises were scaring the kids away and tearing my Saturday business down.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

TECHNOLOGICAL

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 176.—(A) In batteries of various kinds, which is the negative and which the positive element? (B) Is a "dry battery" really dry? (C) Viewed both from the practical and theoretical standpoint, how high would it be possible to build up voltage with ordinary dry cell batteries? (D) How high may amperage be built up with dry cells. With wet cells? (E) Explain the purpose of a fuse and how it acts.

Answer to Question No. 169

Bluebook School Question No. 169 was: (A) Name the various reasons why a good film splicer is essential. (B) Give us your idea of how to keep film cement in good condition. Don't tell us the book way unless you are using it. (C) Tell us what various things will tend to injure film cement. (D) Tell us why too little or too much cement will make a poor splice. (E) Is it possible to splice inflammable and non-inflammable film together?

The following made acceptable answers. The list is the smallest in a long, long while. Surprising how many fell down flat on one or more of Sections B, C, D and E. Here is the list:

Lester Borst (who also sent excellent answers to 167 and 168 too late to be considered), Dale Danielson, S. Evans and C. Rau; G. E. Doe, H. Edwards, W. Ostrum, R. Ackley, D. Goldberg and L. Hutch; T. Van Vaulkenburg; J. Wentworth, H. True, B. Diglah and P. Jackson; H. Rogers, T. N. Williams and R. S. Allen; D. U. Granger, J. F. and O. L. Evans; L. Thomas and D. D. Davis; R. D. Oberleigh, L. Grant and P. T. Zann; G Tinlin, L. Summers and D. M. Banks; F. and J. L. Hanson, Bill Doe; A. Breaston and D. Haber; B. I. Fanchann, O. Emmerson, H. R. Baldwin and G. K. Berger; J. Cermak; J. Kelley and C. Cummings.

Recently I received a letter from a man who sent in two answers some while ago. They were excellent ones, too, but unfortunately another answer suited the needs of publication better—anyhow I thought it did. This man got good and mad. He did not exactly accuse me of robbing hen roosts, but his letter was highly uncomplimentary. He also was considerably offended because it happened that another man of the same name and initials is sending in answers, and some very good ones, too. In reply, I sent him a page from our telephone book showing that right here in Greater New York City, there are no less than five F. H. Richardsons. Attending to the "school" correspondence is a large and trying job. I do it the best I can. I may not always select the best answer to some question, but at least I do select the ones that seem best.

In answering Section A, Goldberg and Hutch say, "(A) We might answer by saying a film splicer is essential for the reason that the making of a perfect splice is next to impossible without one. Otherwise sprocket holes probably will not be perfectly matched, film ends may not be cut true and square, stub end won't be the right length, scraping probably will not be properly done, uneven and perhaps insufficient pressure will be applied to splice. Result as a whole, a bum splice."

Kenneth Dowling answers thus, "The main reason a good film splicer is essential is because it is practically impossible to make a good splice without one. A good splicer correctly lines up the film edges and sprocket holes. It applies a heavy, evenly distributed pressure for the required space of time. The fingers may do one or two of these things, but they cannot possibly do them all at once—result of the failure, a poor splice. It is either out of line, sprocket holes mis-matched or is not firmly welded throughout the whole width of the film. If such a splice does not cause trouble for its maker, then it is almost certain to pull apart later on, if not caught at the exchange—about a 50-50 chance as to that last."

(B) I shall not publish any one answer to this. The general consensus of those who seem to have any real understanding of the matter is that a new bottle of cement should be opened each month, any remaining in the last bottle being discarded. The bottle should be kept tightly corked, preferably with a rubber cork through which the brush handle is passed and sealed air tight therein.

(C) D. Haber answers, "first, exposure to air. Second, contact with rusted metal. Third, water absorbed from air. Fourth, dust and dirt, oil, etc., carried into cement bottle by cement brush. Fifth, use of ordinary cork or poorly fitting one. Cement is very volatile. It will slowly evaporate through an ordinary cork unless it be coated with wax."

(D) J. Wentworth did, I think, a bit the best on this one. He says, "Too little cement will not serve to properly weld two pieces of film together; also, if too little cement be used it is quite possible, or even probable, that some parts of the splice will receive none at all, a condition resulting, of course, in a weak splice. On the other hand, if too much cement be used it will penetrate too deeply, partly dissolving the celluloid and thus weakening it. Moreover, the splice is likely to be stiff or buckled, or both. Then, too, there will be cement squeezed out when pressure is applied in making the splice. This surplus will not only penetrate and weaken the film immediately next the two ends of the splice, but it may and probably will be smeared around over a portion of the photograph, where certainly it will serve no useful purpose, but instead a bad one."

(E) In answering this one, Evans and Rau say, "Yes it is possible to splice inflammable and non-inflammable film together, provided the proper kind of cement is used. The Eastman Kodak Company sells a cement which can be used for this purpose. Another way is to add one part of Glacial acetic acid to four parts of flexible collodion to any of the filaments."

Sam, Dave Harding in Comeback

Sam and Dave Harding, former leading factors in the old Associated Exhibitors of a decade ago, and at one time theatre owners in Kansas City, will return to operation in that city next fall, if current deals materialize. Within a few weeks the brothers will decide definitely whether they will re-open the Empress, downtown 2,000-seater, as a first-run hodse, will stage shows.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

PERCENTAGE MANAGEMENT!

By G. B. ODLUM

G. B. Odlum, the Club's Guest Editor this week, needs little introduction to the majority of members of the Round Table, as he has been a most consistent contributor to this department for several years. To the uninitiated let us state that he is a showman of wide experience, and recently managed theatres in Elmira, N. Y., and Wheeling, W. Va. In his editorial he presents a new idea in theatre management—Percentage—and his logic is interesting to say the least. The standing invitation to expression on this and other pages of this section is again conveyed to all Club Members. Newly signed Guest Editors include: E. E. BAIR, East Liverpool, Ohio; BEN BLACKMON, JR., Syracuse, N. Y.; HAROLD KNUDSEN, Madison, Wis.; GEORGE LABY, Boston; JOSEPH M. SEIDER, New York City; F. J. STUDD, London, England.

'TIS said that one can gaze from the dark depths of the deepest well into the brightest day and behold constellations of gorgeous stars. Certainly showbusiness is in the depths, so let's look from below the surface.

Being an optimist by business a showman must believe in a rosy future, but what about NOW—TODAY?

Big business has had its fling; central control is decimated. Bankers' money is being withdrawn in gobs, referees are in control of the larger groups; yet, the real showman—the fellow who meets the paying customer daily at the places where the pictures bloom, flourish or die all in a few short days, is carrying on, hoping, striving, giving, thriving meagerly on the crumbs that are left from an orgy of riotous spending.

Stories of lavish production and production costs are amusing though tragic. Yet of all the industry, only the production end remains solvent; has flourished on the minor percentage of the gross receipts, while the tangible assets of brick, cement, steel and stone, real estate known as theatres, have sunk on the major end of the receipts.

Even though millions of money have been grossly wasted on production, the pet and pride of the industry, the completed stellar attraction, proceeds merrily on paying fabulous salaries—discarding—endlessly wasting, while the actual outlet, the place where the dimes and dollars accumulate, grow and marshal their might to pay for this abnormal production cost, has failed dismally.

The cure must be in the actual marketing to a purse-tight public by the men who have been taught in the school of experience how to temper their stock in trade with that element of modern and yet age-old selling quality known as showmanship.

One of Broadway's outstanding independent theatre operators recently remarked: "A showman is never better than his picture." Much as I respect his judgment, it has been proven that showmanship CAN increase the B. O. value of a good picture and many times (not always) the same is true of the average feature.

With showmanship in mind, and viewing the theatre field from a showman's angle, we find picture features operating on a percentage basis—authors on p.c., the Home Office collecting in the same manner, so why not the salesman himself, the local manager, on a p.c. as well as the rest of the operating organization.

Many showmen with salaries cut to the low limit of today, depending on centralized booking and having restricted budgets would welcome with open arms a p.c. arrangement, provided they could program the entertainment they deliver to the public as a show unit.

The selection of the shorts supporting the feature, if the show has a weakness; building up local or house interest to add selling value to suit his individual public; and devising exploitation campaigns to fit the specific entertainment unit not a flash for the Home Office representative, should come under his personal supervision.

BUDGETED? Yes. BONDED? Certainly—but with his list of picture contracts before him thinking only of show value and B.O. (incidentally, his own P.C.). Many a showman could work out the salvation of his particular charge, his theatre, making showbusiness again a business of individuality and personality to the profit of all even in these days of acknowledged depression.

Brickbats and bouquets may be hurled at this statement but the fact remains that the theatre end of showbusiness has been wrecked by the errors of yesteryear and the solution be what it may will be an affair of individual showmen.

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Anything can happen in these days of price-cutting, but we sincerely hope showbusiness won't come to this! At any rate, the trend inspired Leo Young to send along this cartoon idea for Dick Kirschbaum's facile pen.

FINE WORK DONE ON "AIRPORT" BY WAUGH OF WARNERS' MEMPHIS

Whenever we hear from our Memphis friend, Howard Waugh, we know we're getting something really good, and so we're not the least bit surprised at his great exploitation campaign pulled in connection with the showing of "Central Airport" at the Warner Theatre, Memphis.

Waugh started off his campaign with a five days' advanced publicity and advertising campaign in the local papers. He had 54 water color signs painted on windows in downtown locations. In addition, his advance campaign included radio announcements over two of the local broadcasting stations, which mentioned picture and playdate, five days in advance.

For four days, Waugh had a local paper run a Richard Barthelmess memory contest, in which the readers were invited to guess the titles of the star's previous pictures from published photographs taken from his past hits. He tied up the mid-south airways in Memphis, which put on an air circus every Sunday, using heralds, and miniature parachutes with passes. Several thousands of people witnessed these air circuses, with the result that the theatre received an excellent play.

But Waugh didn't stop there. He went ahead and borrowed 10 "No Parking" signs, on which he painted "Central Airport," and planted them in the busiest sections in his city. Waugh's elaborate theatre front included a regulation parachute suspended from the top of the building, and which could be seen for blocks. A miniature airplane was attached to a pipe suspended from the center of the marquee directly over the box-office in front of the sidewalk. This was attached to a motor, worked from the box-office, which caused the airplane to fly in a circle with the motor furnishing the sound of an airplane propeller.

COMPLETE CAMPAIGN SOLD CHARNINSKY'S FILM "STATE FAIR"

"State Fair," in addition to providing a box-office hit for Louis Charninsky, also turned out a personal triumph for the live-wire showman who handles the Booth Theatre, Independence, Kas.

Louis left no stone unturned to put over an effective campaign, and just to show you how thorough it was, we will run briefly over the highlights.

Window displays were secured throughout the town, one large window in the heart of the community being given over to 1,500 prize winning ribbons from every state fair in the country.

One of the largest street parades ever seen in the town included seven carnival wagons with animals of all descriptions, nine riding horses, a goat led by a man, band wagon with clown band, local Girls' and Boys' Drum and Bugle Corps, and seven clowns on foot, throwing balloons to the crowd. Police escort was furnished for the parade.

The front of the theatre and the inside lobby, both carried out in circus tone, did plenty to help sell the picture. And not only that, but Louis gave popcorn and peanuts free to patrons. His advertising and trailers were well handled and, as we said before, it turned out, by virtue of hard work, to be another Charninsky success.

MacLEVY RETURNS!

After taking several months' fling at managing a group of theatres on Long Island, Monty MacLevy is again holding down his former post of supervisor of publicity and exploitation for the Randforce Circuit, Brooklyn, N. Y., comprising forty-odd theatres and headed by Louis Frisch and Samuel Rinzler. Congratulations are in order from all of Monty's old friends. And the Round Table Club may now count on regularly receiving news of what all the enterprising men with Randforce are doing.

MORATORIUM DIDN'T STOP HARDING FROM PUTTING OVER SHOW

Bank holiday or no bank holiday, William Harding, manager, Lyric Theatre, Blue Island, Ill., wasn't going to be stopped in his showselling campaigns, and that's why he doped out a corking three-quarter page tie-up with the local merchants.

The stunt was one that has been used in the Club pages before, and with the Harding twist, it proved doubly effective. The space was taken in uniform size by various merchants—one-column seven-inch form. It was a bit difficult, at first, to sell the merchants on the ad size, but after Harding explained his plan to them they all agreed to co-operate.

Readers of the newspaper were informed through a special paragraph on top of space donated by the newspaper, that they were to look through all the merchants' ads for mispelled words, and then spell it as it was in the ad, and alongside that putting the correct spelling. Answers were judged on neatness as well as correctness. Both the newspaper and the merchants were pleased with the result of the stunt, and it bids fair to be used again by Harding in the very near future.

BALLYHOO PLAYED AN IMPORTANT PART IN ED HART'S CAMPAIGN

We're a bit late reporting on what Ed. M. Hart, city manager for Walter Reade over in Plainfield, N. J., did to build business for "State Fair," but better a little late than never. Okay, Ed?

The accompanying photo shows the hay wagon Ed used to ballyhoo the attraction. Kiddies rode in the wagon as it was driven through town and attracted public attention by blowing on horns.

Another bally that produced a lot of publicity and much fun for onlookers was a pig which Hart promoted from a Jersey farmer. The animal was appropriately bannered and led around town by a man, who also carried "State Fair" advertising. Ed tells us the pig was pretty frisky the first day, but cooled down to the extent of losing 10 pounds before the campaign was over. The owner took him back and stated that the porker was just as good as ever.

The theme of the picture evidently influenced Hart to stress the ballyhoo phase in exploitation; at any rate, the stunts drew the public eye and excellent business resulted.

ADVANCE PUBLICITY NICELY ENGINEERED BY MANAGER BOSTICK

E. C. Bostick, managing director of the Lyceum Theatre, Winnipeg, Canada, put over an excellent showmanship campaign for "Be Mine Tonight" with the result that the picture has been held over for a second week.

A specially arranged preview was held for Parliament members well in advance of the playdate and their enthusiastic comments were used in newspaper, radio and front advertising. Another advance preview was given critics, heads of local clubs and civic officials and their comments likewise used in advertising and publicity.

Bostick arranged for three radio broadcasts, two of a half hour and one of fifteen minutes. Orchestras and singers featured the hit song numbers from the picture and comments of prominent persons were read by the announcer.

The head of the local concert bureau wrote a special letter to his entire mailing list of 3,000 music lovers, enthusiastically praising the picture and urging them to see it.

Through a tie-up with Catholic organizations for a monster benefit performance, announcements of the picture were made from the pulpits of all Catholic churches. For this event Bostick added the "Voice of the Vatican" reel to his program.

Extra newspaper space, building up to a four-column by 11 inches opening announcement, and a wide billing of 24-sheets completed the campaign.

PHILLY'S "CHINESE WALL" 100 PER CENT SHOW INVESTMENT

Perhaps you have heard about Philadelphia's famous "Chinese Wall," but in the event you haven't we believe it's a yarn that bears re-telling.

On the outside of the Pennsylvania Railroad Station, a 25 foot square screen has been constructed and is used by the railroad, which maintains the screen; the Stanton Theatre, conducting projection, and the Philadelphia Daily News, taking care of the news flashes.

And this is where Sid Davidson, live-wire manager of the Warner Stanton Theatre, comes in. He takes care of all the film ad copy and besides doing a remarkable job on that, he manages to get himself, free of charge, a hundred dollars worth of advertising weekly, in the Daily News.

The only cost to the theatre on the stunt is the price of the balioptican and a few dollars a month for slides. The screen cuts the Philly Market Street shopping district in two, attracting the attention of thousands of shoppers and workers every evening. It's a one hundred per cent investment for a one hundred per cent showman—Sid Davidson.

Novelty Throw-Away

When exploiting "What, No Beer?" G. B. Odlum, formerly of the Colonial Theatre, Elmira, N. Y., used a small throw-away card to good advantage. One side read: "What, No Beer?" (large type). Down in the corner was: "Phone 25738, 112 State St." The reverse read: "The Real 'Stuff'. —Buster and Schnozzoli—Opening Their New 'Speak' 11 P. M. Saurday Night (date) 112 State St., Elmira, N. Y."

"LAUGH PARADE" WEEK A HIT IN LONDON!

Harry W. Crull, formerly connected here in America at the Audubon Theatre, but now knocking showmanship for a loop at the Empire Theatre in London, England, utilized a number of important angles to sell a week "Laugh Parade," in which he offered a Mickey Mouse cartoon, Laurel and Hardy Comedy, and the film, "What, No Beer?" A regiment of sandwich men (see photo) plugged the picture; a truck ballyhoo was effective; a daily premium was given through a newspaper tie-up, in which the "happiest face" snapped daily by a newspaper photographer was rewarded, and a nationally advertised candy contributed 10,000 samples. Great show selling.

BANK HOLIDAY BOON TO TROYER, WHO HAD EXPERT EXPLAIN IT

During the recent bank holiday, showmen all over the country endeavored to capitalize on it in some manner, and as a result, Carter S. Troyer, manager of the New State Theatre, Bottineau, N. D., lost no time in summoning an expert on finance to appear at his theatre and explain President Roosevelt's proclamation.

This move, which cost the theatre only the cost of heralds, did a tremendous business for the house the evening following the edict; especially so, since a great many farmers in outlying districts wanted a more definite and intimate explanation.

But that happened to be only one example of Troyer's showman moves. He has also made an institution of a monthly program card distributed for miles around. The card pays for itself, merchants taking space on the front cover and the inside borders.

Then, still another effective exploitation angle was created by a co-operative page of advertising run in the local newspapers. As an added inducement, readers were offered free tickets if they could guess the names of certain pictures Marie Dressler had played in. Scene mats were placed in the individual ads as guides.

We are pleased to see that Troyer is one of those alert showmen who more than take advantage of Round Table ideas passed on by members all over the country, and we want him to know we more than appreciate his work to pass along.

FRANK BOUCHER AT OLD STAND IN MD. GETS FINE WELCOME

Reassigned his old post at the helm of the Maryland Theatre, Hagerstown, Md., Frank Boucher, recently in charge of the Capitol, Winchester, Va., was given a fitting welcome home by business associates and friends. The newspaper men voiced their approval of his return with plenty of publicity, the merchants said it with a cooperative ad and the public with a merry clink, clink at the box office. The campaign was called "Welcome Back Frank Boucher Week."

Approximately two dozen leading merchants combined to fill a page co-op. which bore the head: "Welcome Back Frank Boucher" and copy in each ad bore some reference to his homecoming. Newspaper advertising, 300 window cards and 100 one-sheets were made up along the same lines and 2,500 roto heralds on "State Fair" were distributed from house to house five days in advance.

Many unsolicited letters from men prominent in business and civic activities were received by Frank Boucher, all testifying to his popularity as a theatre manager. With the thought in mind that other managers in their sometimes ceaseless wanderings over the face of the map may in time find themselves back from whence they started, we set these words down. Other managers held in high esteem in their communities may as well capitalize on a stunt such as this. But it was the way Frank handled it that brought home the bacon.

GETTIER REVAMPED OLD GAG AND MADE CASH REGISTER HUM

Just a new coat of Silver over the old coat of Gold, explains Vogel Gettier, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Sedalia, Mo., was the idea behind a stunt used in the campaign he waged on "Silver Dollar."

Motivated by the desire to land a full-page co-op (which is not too easy these days), he arranged to give out nothing but silver dollars at the box-office one week in advance of opening when making change for five, ten and twenty and fifty-dollar (try and fine one) bills. The co-op ads were based on a 10 per cent discount when advertised articles were purchased with silver dollars. The idea was further carried out by the theatre in taking receipted bills of these purchases and allowing another 10 per cent discount on purchase of tickets. A tie-up made with a dairy concern netted the distribution of 7,000 milk bottle caps made to resemble a silver dollar, equally divided between cream and milk customers so every one would get a shot at the 10 per cent discount offered by the dairy. Each merchant in the deal had a window display featured by gigantic silver dollars, $ marks, cut-outs, stills and credit cards.

As followers of Gettier's campaigns know, his long suit has always been newspaper play-up as the first medium and straight ballyhoo for a follow-up; however, in this case, with exception of some novel advance trailers, special lobby and foyer art displays, he banked on the layout and dairy tie-up to do his sales work. It will also be recalled that Gettier generally limits his tie-ups to large firms rather than making an attempt to promote the entire business community, his page in this case only carrying a few but representative listings.

Atlantic City Pageant!

The Atlantic City Beauty Pageant is definitely set for September 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9 and, according to advice from Pageant headquarters, several theatre circuits have already requested the privilege of holding a series of contests in various houses and bringing the finals down to one of the large houses in a key city. The Pageant Committee leans toward theatre selection of representatives, it is said. These affairs have turned out excellent box office attractions.

B'WAY DISPLAY

A modern front for Dicken's literary effort, "Oliver Twist," transcribed to the screen, proved an effective sales angle for Broadway when the film played the Rivoli Theatre recently. Transparent banner signs lent a "sales" tone to the marquee. Stills were sprinkled profusely about the multi-colored beaverboard display.

HARRIS WANTS TO KNOW!

Harry Harris, general manager of the Exchange Kinema and Lincoln Theatres, Lincoln, England, would like to know why showmen in the U. S. A. seldom use the type of poster shown in the accompanying illustration. Maybe some of his brother Round Tablers can supply the answer so we can pass the word back to Harry. Is the cost of turning out special teaser one-sheets prohibitive? Or what?

You'll have to admit that this catches the eye, and while it's only one of some 200 attractive teaser posters designed by Harris he considers it the most productive of the lot, particularly when posted in empty stores and houses, real estate agencies, etc. Since we've commented from time to time upon a number of his posters, we, too, believe that this is certainly one of the best he has turned out.

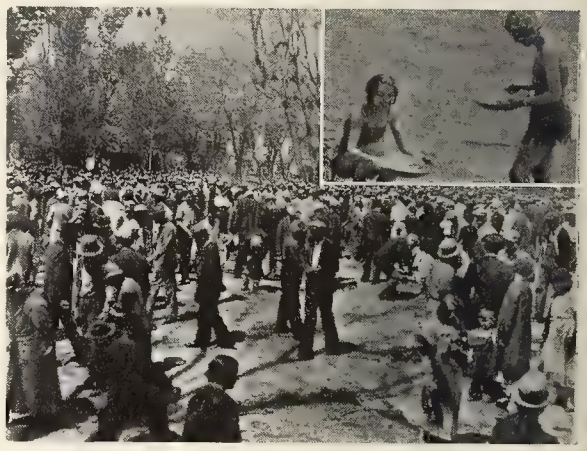
DRESS SHOP PLAYED IMPORTANT PART IN KEYES' SHOWMANSHIP

Tie-ups with local dress shops played an important part in the campaign engineered by Bill Keyes, manager, Victory Theatre, Dayton, Ohio, for "42nd Street."

One of the windows showed the latest fashions in black and white ensembles and were effectively tied-in with a shot from the picture. The background of the window was done in modernistic style, with the composition mannequins being modeled the same fashion.

In addition to the window display, Keyes sold the picture as the biggest motion picture hit of the year. A radio tie-up proved a good means of bringing them to the box-office through the medium of the many whistly tunes. The lobby display was carried out in breezy fashion, and showed the girls attired in those "Danger—Keep Away" dresses. It was a fine bit of showmanship, but since Bill is turning such work out on every picture, we hope he'll keep us posted on the rest of his activities.

HUFFMAN GETS FINE RESULTS WITH FIRST "GOLD DIGGERS" SMASH



Harry Huffman of Denver put over a corking campaign for "Gold Diggers" before the picture opened at both the Orpheum and Aladdin theatres simultaneously. Here is his campaign in a nutshell.

Tripling his usual amount of paper, using 2,000 window cards and making both lobbies a riot of gold flash, Huffman had everyone in Denver talking about the picture for three weeks before he opened. One of his most effective stunts was a tie-up with the Denver Post for a "Gold Diggers' Treasure Hunt." Huffman buried $200 in gold in a large vacant lot. This gold consisted of eighty $2.50 gold pieces, in as many boxes distributed all over the lot.

The Denver Post announced the Gold Digging hunt three days in advance of the event, and when the day for the Treasure Hunt arrived, 8,000 Denverites lined up along the ropes that had been put up around the lot and waited for the starting signal.

In addition to this "Gold Diggers' Hunt," Huffman used a sound truck with banners during the rush hours the two days preceding the openings and the two days following. In addition, he used a new style model car, carrying banners and six pretty chorines. This car was paraded through the business district, the girls standing on the car, in front of which was a man dressed up as a miner, riding a burro on which was a sign, "A Gold Digger of 1849."

We are showing one the various street

stunts pulled—two chorus girls in costumes "digging" for gold along the water front. Every music store in town carried window streamers advertising the picture and the song hits in it. Every orchestra in town used "Gold Diggers" music with credit, for three weeks prior to the opening.

The opening night, a lobby microphone was used over which prominent patrons broadcast their opinion of "Gold Diggers of 1933."

Although this treasure hunt idea has been used before, credit is due Harry Hoffman for the fine campaign he engineered. Let's hear some more from you and your doings in Denver.

BERKHIMER BACKED "HOT PEPPER" WITH ELECTRIC ICE-BOX

A couple of window displays aided M. E. Berkhimer, manager of the Coronado Theatre, Las Vegas, Mexico, on his campaign to make "Hot Pepper" hotter than hot.

One display was obtained in the window of an electrical refrigerator shop and in the foreground, Berkhimer placed a film can and a sign stating: "We are keeping the film 'Hot Pepper' cool in this (refrigerator) until it opens at the Coronado, Sunday." The display was surrounded by attractive stills and catchy copy.

Another angle was that of tying up with a local grocery store and in the window strings of hot peppers were strung from side to side, and in circles. The red peppers provided an eye-filling background for stills mounted on green cards.

And with activity of this sort being turned out by Berkhimer you can bet that it did its part toward bringing that extra business into the box-office. Thanks, "M. E."

O. SWANSON FOUND THRIFT TICKET WAS "FAMILY TRADE" AID

Unable to lower box-office price for fear that if the results were not satisfactory he would be unable ever to jack them back to normalcy, O. F. Swanson, manager of the Colonial Theatre, Southington, Conn., decided upon a plan which he found increased his business considerably and eliminated the dreaded admission cut.

Swanson's stunt was a "Family Thrift Ticket."

Merchants within a radius of ten miles were given window cards and coupons announcing that the Colonial was to inaugurate a "Family Thrift Ticket," a coupon for which, obtained at the local merchant's and exchanged at the theatre box-office would permit the holder to the new bargain ducat.

The "Thrift Tickets" were printed five by two inches on regular cardboard stock and perforated to allow blocks of four tickets. A batch was run off for the orchestra, nights and evenings, and another crop for the matinees. The stunt proved effective and if you think you'd like to try it, why not drop Swanson a line at his theatre, and we are sure he will be glad to give you any information you may seek on the idea.

METZGER RE-NAMED STREET TO TIE IN WITH MUSICAL FILM

Lew Metzger, manager of the New Spreckles Theatre, San Diego, Calif., certainly more than forty-five minutes from Broadway, but that didn't stop him from putting over a White Way campaign on "42nd Street," when the musical opus played his house.

In addition to plastering the town with banners, Metzger made radio tie-ups and music shop displays; he re-named his theatre street for "42nd Street," obtaining permission to do so during the run of the film; and with an attractive lobby display and front, plus his newspaper ad campaign, he achieved success on the picture. And when a showman like Lou turns out a campaign, you can bet it's complete. Let's have some more, Lou.

MIKE WAINSTOCK IS TURNING OUT FINE WORK IN SMALL CITY

A good idea of what can be accomplished by a wide-awake manager of a theatre in a town of 8,000 population may be gained by looking over the accompanying illustration. It is a reproduction of a print submitted by Charles Winchell, division advertising and publicity director of the Minnesota Amusement Company, and is evidence of the attractive work being turned out by Mike Wainstock, manager of the Lyric Theatre, Watertown, S. D.

The display on "Sign of Cross" pictured here was made with velour set back of arch and with pillars on each side. The awning on top was held up with spears. Concealed lighting behind the arch set of the colored art work and velour. 14 by 17 panels on each side and four other panels on either end rounded out the scheme.

Both to us and to Charles Winchell the excellence of Wainstock's work is apparent, even though the small proportions of the photo do not show the display to full advantage. Thanks to Winchell for his part of the contribution. We'll be on watch for more of Mike's handiwork.

"GABRIEL" AD ALSO ADAPTABLE TO FILM NEEDING GOOD PLUG

Perhaps you have seen them by now, since they ran in all the key city newspapers, but in case you haven't let us say a word or two about the corking ads created by the Loew theatres advertising department for "Gabriel Over the White House."

Our purpose in passing along this brief analysis and explanation is not to sell you on using the ads, if you are playing the film, and then discarding them, but to tell you that the angles can be used on almost any picture you play.

One of the best of the black and white ads plugged first the picture title, which was centralized in the layout. Then, flanking the title, forming a background was a number of new briefs on the picture. The title and theatre plug were done in L style with the news shots on the picture filling in to form a square ad. It was very effective.

Another ad showed a heavily-bordered box, center blank, and copy on upper left hand corner: "What about our future? What's the Country Coming to?" In the lower right hand corner: "Hold This Ad to the Light—Read the Answer." When held to the light, the answer proved to be a plug on the picture and theatre.

PARKINSON WON FIRST AWARD FOR CAMPAIGN ON PROSPERITY FILM

As an aftermath of discussion of many campaigns made throughout the country on "Prosperity," we are presenting a resume of one waged by M. F. Parkinson, manager of the New Iowa and State Theatres, Jefferson, Iowa, which was adjudged first award in the national contests sponsored by producers of the picture.

Working on the principle that a campaign must be kept within bounds of a theatre's budget and at the same time produce out-of-the ordinary results, Parkinson placed full faith in the excellent special campaign book issued by the M-G-M exploitation department and then went ahead full steam. Knowledge and confidence in the following facts and theories played an important part in the outcome: viz—that presidential election was past; that the time was "ripe"; that the tie-up was a "natural"; that the merchants were all set for such a campaign, and that "Prosperity" was not hiding behind a corner, but really here.

Snipes, heralds and small, circular stickers played an effective part in advance exploitation. The snipes were given to the merchants, who later contributed to promotion of a splendid cooperative page, heralds were distributed throughout a 120 mile territory and the popular stickers were used to identify "prosperity" packages sent out by participating merchants, pasted on milk bottles, auto windshields and placed in every photo, card, etc., used in advance displays at the theatre.

In addition to the whole-hearted support given by merchants and two newspapers, Parkinson prevailed upon the Mayor to issue an official proclamation, which dealt with general and local business conditions and urged cooperation on the part of every citizen and business man in the matter of making the campaign an outstanding one.

Parkinson is inclined to believe that the hub on which his campaign "wheel" centered was represented by the big co-op ad, awards and a slogan contest featured on the page. Approximately 16 merchants took space in the ad, each of which played up the word "Prosperity" and a deluge of answers to the request for "Prosperity" slogans testified to the popularity of that stunt. Guest tickets were offered for proper assembling of words scatered throughout the different ads that spelled "Prosperity Is Here." Cash awards were given for best original slogans.

F. BOUCHER PUT OVER TWO STUNTS BEFORE HE LEFT FOR HAGERSTOWN

Before leaving his headquarters at the Capitol Theatre, Winchester, Va., to resume his old post as manager of the Maryland Theatre at Hagerstown, Md., Frank Boucher delivered his valedictory in the form of Country Store night and a deal with the Lux soap distributor for a large co-op ad. Awards and guest tickets figured conspicuously in both instances.

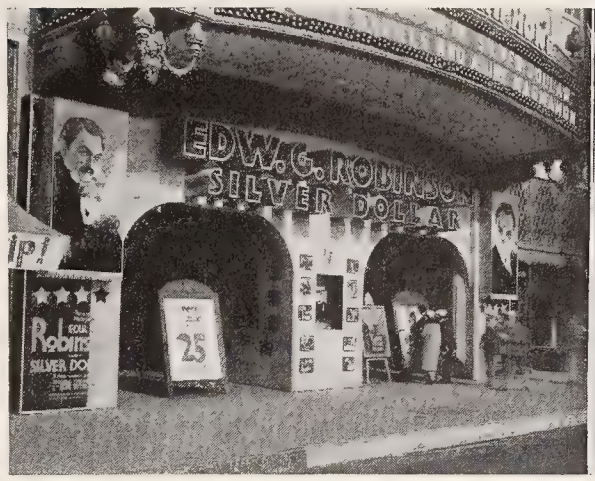
At this writing Boucher is holding forth at his old stand and Tom Balridge, manager of the Colonial Theatre in Hagerstown for the past two years, has taken charge of the Capitol and Colonial in Winchester. Just as soon as both get their new charges running along smoothly we'll hope to hear more about what's doing in showbusiness down their way.

WEST COAST EXPLOITATION ACTIVITIES

EXTENSIVE CAMPAIGN WAGED BY ROSENBLUM THROUGHOUT EUROPE

To impress Continental Europe with the fact that never before had five so celebrated stars appeared as headliners in one picture, Paul Rosenblum, exploiter with the M-G-M Paris office, inaugurated a "resemblance" campaign well in advance of opening dates that not only netted "Grand Hotel" columns of free publicity but put movie patrons in six different countries on edge to witness the picture.

The campaign began December 1 and continued until February 21 and rules and regulations of the stunt to find five persons nearest resembling Garbo, the two Barrymores, Crawford and Beery were planted in newspapers in leading cities of France, Belgium, Italy, Spain, Austria and Hungary. The move was conducted under the name of "International Resemblance Contest to the Five Stars of 'Grand Hotel'—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's Proudest Effort—Under the Patronage of (Newspaper)." All newspapers carried application coupons, rules, photos and listings of awards.



Starting in provincial communities and smaller cities, where the papers generously supported the move and contributed practically all expenses connected with eliminations, the trials progressed to the capital cities for the semi-final eliminations prior to choosing contestants for the grand finale at Paris. All candidates submitted photographs with their applications, which were published by the different papers.

The five candidates chosen by a representative jury at each capital arrived in Paris and were provided free transportation both ways, free accommodations at a first class hotel, pending selection of the five winners, to whom were awarded 21-day trips through France, Belgium and Spain, with a one week stop-off on the Riviera. This tour was secured gratis through a tie-up with an important European hotel concern. Prior to making the awards an elaborate ball was arranged in honor of the many candidates.

Additional publicity was obtained by Rosenblum through a tie-up with a well known modiste for displays of two new dress creations designed in honor of Garbo and Crawford. Trailers were projected in all theatres booked for the picture and a good idea of the extent of this publicity may be gained in the knowledge that 43 trailers were run in the city of Budapest alone. The Resemblance contest was plugged in both trailers and special programs.

It is entirely within reason to believe that the above campaign was one of the most elaobrate bids for publicity ever made in the afore-mentioned countries and Rosenblum is certainly due unstinted praise for the way he handled his end of the work. As he states, the best part about the whole thing was that it was carried out with very little expense to the home office. The picture held its premiere a short time ago in Paris and we'll venture an opinion that the film proved the big box office smash it was in most every place it played.

Paul Rosenblum is an enthusiastic member of the Round Table Club and we're mighty glad to have him for our representative in this part of the world. We'll hope to advise further concerning his exploitation activities as we are always interested in our foreign members' stunts.

DOLGIN AND SACKETT PUT OVER CAMPAIGN ON "SILVER DOLLAR"

Sol Dolgin and Manager George Sackett got together on a wow of a campaign when "Silver Dollar" played the Warner Bros. Hollywood Theatre. It seems that these west coast boys are setting a fast pace these days and from all reports they get some mighty fine results. Pictured here is a photograph showing the very attractive theatre front and display they worked up.

The cashiers of the theatre handed out silver dollars to all patrons with their change. This stunt created quite a bit of comment and not one patron refused the silver dollars. Photostatic copies of all old papers were used for lobby blow-ups stressing the picture and true story angle.

All people presenting at the box-office silver dollars bearing the date (1881, year of opening of Tabor's Opera house) received a free admission. A tie-up was effected with the local merchants and a Silver Dollar Day was set aside. This stunt plugged the title to all shoppers and netted plenty of publicity.

In addition to this the boys had a large ballyhoo truck, which was larger than a twenty-four sheet stand, fitted up with lights, generator plant and a public address system. With this they covered all the important streets in Hollywood.

The ushers were dressed in miners' garb and a fine tie-up was hatched with the Public Library whereby bookmarks were distributed in all the local schools. Pictured below are two of the fine lobby displays used and also the box office of the theatre. The local bank had a display of silver dollars in their window and worked up a guessing contest, the winner receiving a ten dollar bank account. This contest plugged the picture and had a continuous crowd in front of the bank window.

This campaign had some very fine material and we are sure some of the boys will benefit by Dolgin and Sackett's good work.

SILVERWATCH IS ON GOLD STANDARD OF SHOWMAN HERALDS

Since his local public seems to be best sold on heralds, Max Silverwatch, manager of the Strand Theatre, Waverly, Mass., has concentrated to a great extent on this angle, with the result that he turns out some corking pieces.

Here, in brief, are a few: On "Cynara" he printed a scene on some red cards. The back of the card carried copy. It was an effective work.

Then, on "Farewell to Arms" he had a corker. Purchasing a half dozen of Hemingway's books (from the Modern Library, we presume) he dissembled them, and on each page, imprinted in red, copy on the picture. They were bound to sell. Also, on this picture, he played to the Italian population of the town, distributing circulars to their homes, and netting almost the entire Italian quarter.

For his "Gala Show Week" Silverwatch plugged it on circulars by advertising two pictures. The heralds were circus flyer style attractively printed in purple on a white background, and carried scene mats as well as copy.

To boost his kiddie business during showing of a serial, a card, dated in boxes for the twelve chapters, was handed the kids as they entered each week. The card was punched, and if they furnished totally punched cards at the end of the film, they were allowed a free ticket.

Silverwatch has many interesting angles of this type, and we believe he will be glad to send showmen requesting them some samples of his work in the event they might want to use them in their town, too. How about it, Max?

Ranger Club Activities

The Buck Jones Rangers Club sponsored by Columbia Pictures Corp. continues its program of expansion, over 8,000 entries having been registered in the National Essay Contest conducted a short time ago.

As to tie-ups, a deal has been completed with the Kress and Kresge stores to feature Buck Jones garments in special departments in all stores.

In response to requests from Ranger members, an aviation division is being formed so that the boys may have expert guidance in the building of 'plane models and learning the history of aviation.

Other tie-ups include Western Union, Del Monte Hat Co., National Carbon, Ridgeway Tea and a jig saw puzzle manufacturer, with which window displays will be featured from time to time.

Among the exhibitors, Dave Snaper, well known New Jersey showman, has inaugurated Ranger clubs throughout his circuit; the Sheldon Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., is stimulating interest by featuring four one-round boxing bouts as part of the club program, and the Springer-Cocalis Circuit, also of New York City, is finding the Ranger movement productive as a business builder.

THE CLUB CONTINUES TO EXPAND!

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Five hundred thousand at the World's Fair opening week. That's a lot of customers, and exhibitors are generally agreed that they felt the effects at the box office. As Emil Stern of Essaness says, you can't put on any kind of big event without having it take a cut into theatre attendance. And this one will last five months.

Henry Ellman of Capitol Film Corporation, having moved into larger quarters on the third floor at 831 South Wabash, made a trip to New York to sign up for a line of new attractions.

In a bold daylight robbery a lone bandit forced the cashier at Dick Beck's Castle theatre to hand over $51 in receipts at a spot reputed to be the busiest corner in the world.

Max Gumbiner has taken over the Mid-city theatre on Madison street from Paul Rutishauer.

Aaron Saperstein called a general meeting of Illinois exhibitors at the Congress hotel Monday to discuss the Administration's new industry control bill. The following day Saperstein left for New York to attend the national meeting of the Allied board of directors.

Thirty-eight motion picture machine operators are employed at the World's Fair handling standard 16 mm film projectors—at $2.50 per hour.

George West of Exhibitors Screen Service attended the Allied convention at Kansas City.

A tieup for a screen contest covering 700 cities has been made by Universal with the operators of the project "Hollywood" at the Fair.

Abe Montague, general sales manager of Columbia, was a visitor at the local exchange last week.

Joe Hartman has joined the sales staff of United Artists. He will cover the city territory.

Announcement was made last week that Aaron Jones has acquired the State-Lake theatre for a term of years.

Abe Blumstein, short subject manager of Columbia, made a visit to the home office in New York.

E. L. Price has opened a newly built theatre at Freeport, Ill. It is called the Port and seats 300.

The Tarzan serial starring Buster Crabbe has been acquired for Illinois by Henri Ellman.

Richard Beck has acquired distribution right in Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin for "This Nude World." Beck is opening the picture at the Castle for the edification of World Fair visitors.

WHEN you use that phrase, the chances are your picture was made on Eastman Super-sensitive Panchromatic Negative ... with the ingenious gray backing to give it that extra ounce of brilliance ... that pleasing anti-glare effect ... HOLLYWOOD HERALD

Extraordinary Cast Makes This Wow B. O. Attraction

"Dinner at Eight," MGM

WHO'S WHO

Players: Marie Dressler, John Barrymore, Wallace Beery, Jean Harlow, Lionel Barrymore, Lee Tracy, Edmund Lowe, Billie Burke, Madge Evans, Jean Hersholt, Karen Morley, Louise Closser Hale, Phillips Holmes, May Robson, Grant Mitchell, Phoebe Foster, Elizabeth Patterson, Hilda Vaughn, Harry Beresford, Edwin Maxwell, John Davidson, Edward Woods, George Baxter, Herman Bing, Anna Duncan.

Producer, David O. Selznick. Director, George Cukor. Assistant Director, H. Tate. Screen play, Frances Marion, Herman J. Mankiewicz. Stage play, George S. Kaufman, Edna Ferber. Additional dialogue, Donald Ogden Stewart. Cameraman, William Daniels, Sound Engineer, Douglas Shearer. Art Directors, Hobe Erwin, Fred Hope. Film Editor, Ben Lewis. Musical score, Dr. William Axt.

As an attraction this is like one of those big benefits that sometimes happen in New York. This will be a great benefit to the box offices of the theatres and, of course, to MGM.

The difference between this production and the presentation of an assemblage of big names such as happens at "benefits" in New York is that here the names really have a chance to do something.

The story structure is very definitely episodic and that is what in a way suggested the thought of a benefit because it was like seeing a group of fine players in a series of comedy and dramatic sketches.

Of course all of the characters are, to a degree, related in the development of this play, but on the screen it is quite noticeable that the action deals separately with each group up to the final moment when the several characters meet at the dinner, the planning of which has provided the thread for presenting all of them with their comical and tragical positions in life.

Undoubtedly this will be a box office sensation. It is one of the greatest casts ever put into a single feature production. It will entertain because the players have a chance to give excellent performances without too much conflict between too many of the stars at any one time.

While Marie Dressler hits in a big way every time she appears, it is quite probable that the battling scenes between Jean Harlow and Wally Beery will be held as the comedy high spots. Miss Harlow proves again how tremendously she has progressed and how well she knows how to handle comedy. She was photographed to excellent advantage. Wally Beery was perfect as the rough neck husband of the cheating Harlow and their scenes are as good comedy as anything that has ever been screened.

For once in a feature where the both appear, John Barrymore gets the break over Lionel. As he always is, Lionel was excellent in the character of the harassed financier but the opportunities offered by the part were not as good as those John had in doing the down-and-out movie actor.

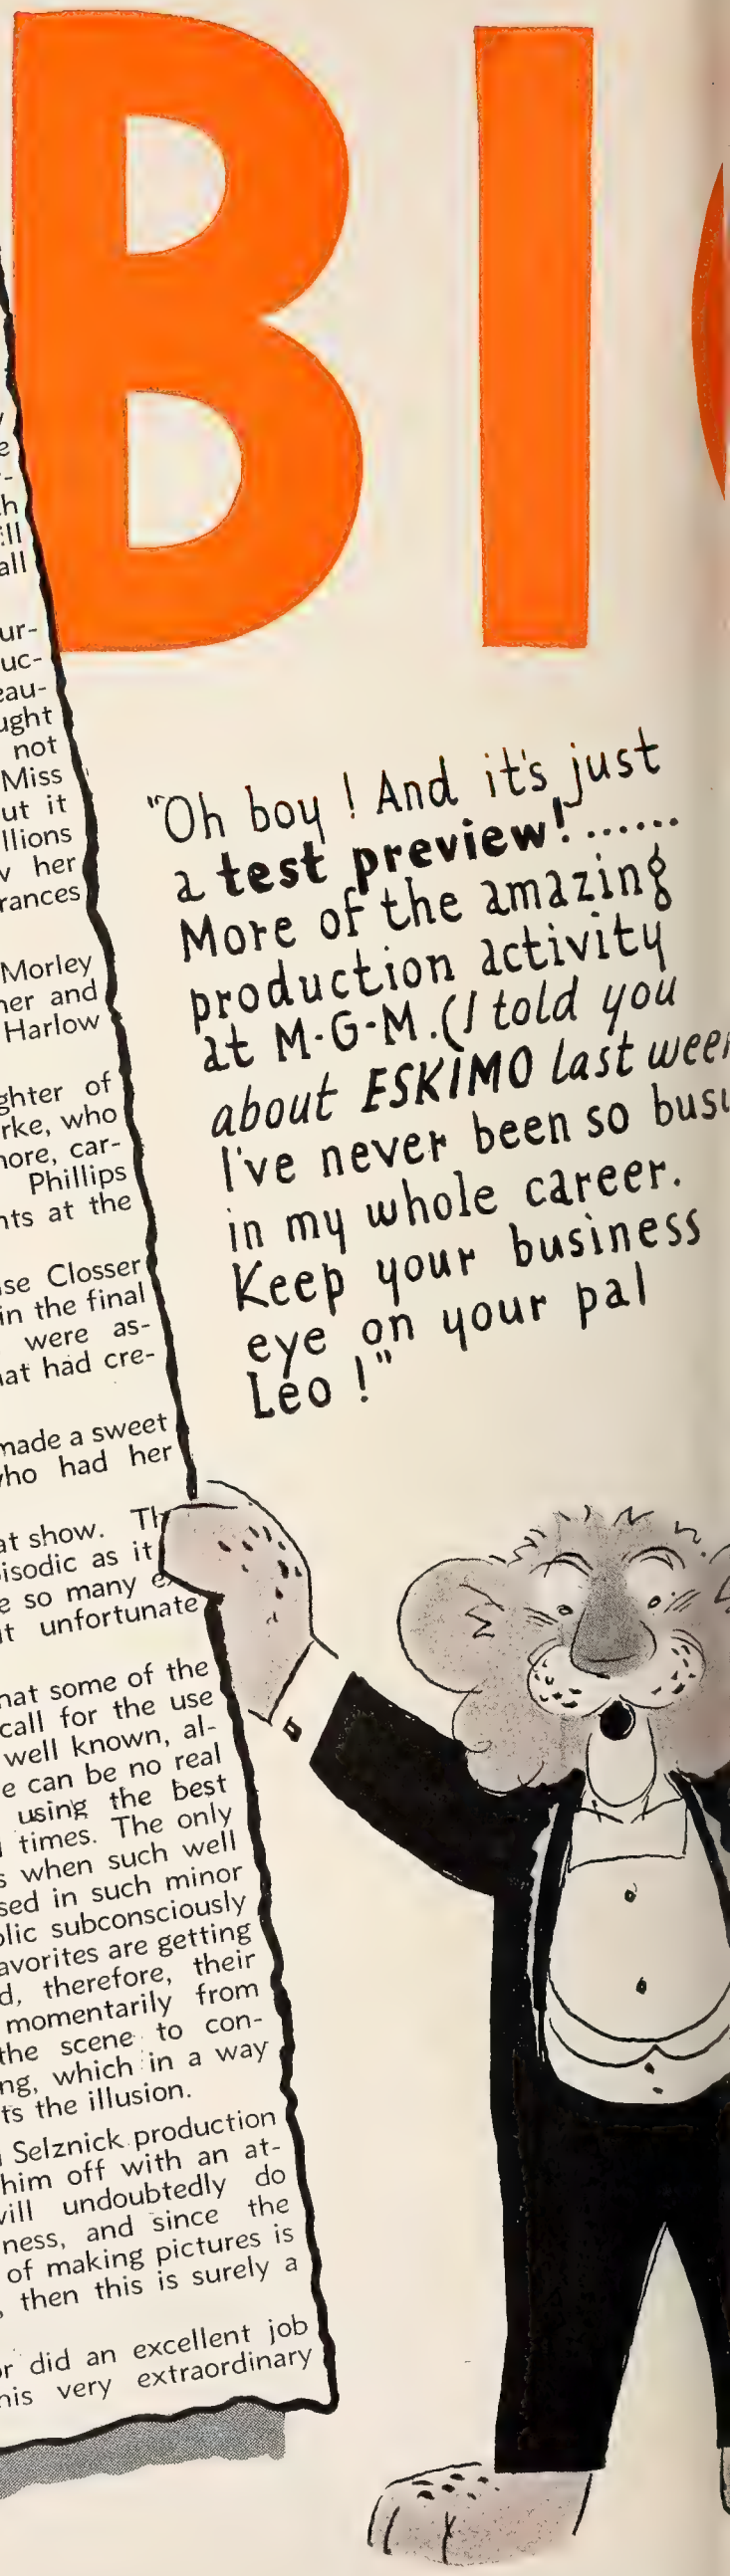
Lee Tracy worked in the scenes with John Barrymore and held his part nicely in line, letting Mr. Barrymore carry the spotlight as was proper under the circumstances. The sequence in which John worked up to the suicide will probably always be remembered by all who see it.

Billie Burke was one of the surprises of this rather amazing production. She hit several scenes so beautifully that her performance brought spontaneous applause. This will not surprise those who know of Miss Burke's career in the theatre, but it will probably startle a few millions who have only come to know her recently because of her appearances on the screen.

Edmund Lowe and Karen Morley have an excellent scene together and Lowe has scenes with Miss Harlow and Mr. Beery.

Madge Evans as the daughter of Lionel Barrymore and Miss Burke, who was in love with John Barrymore, carried through nicely with Phillips Holmes in for a few moments at the end as Miss Evans' fiance.

Grant Mitchell and Louise Closser Hale gathered some laughs in the final sequence when the guests were assembling for the dinner that had created so much commotion.



Grand old May Robson made a sweet bit out of the cook who had her troubles.

Of course this is a great show. The story structure being episodic as it makes it possible to use so many excellent players without unfortunate conflict.

It is quite possible that some of the smaller parts did not call for the use of players who are so well known, although of course there can be no real criticism because of using the best people possible at all times. The only thing which happens when such well known people are used in such minor bits is that the public subconsciously realizes that these favorites are getting so little to do and, therefore, their minds are taken momentarily from consideration of the scene to consideration of casting, which in a way definitely interrupts the illusion.

This first David Selznick production for MGM starts him off with an attraction that will undoubtedly do tremendous business, and since the definite purpose of making pictures is to make money, then this is surely a great success.

George Cukor did an excellent job in handling this very extraordinary cast.

What should prove one of the greatest box office attractions of modern times, has been fashioned by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, under the supervision of David O. Selznick, in the production of "Dinner At Eight." The attractiveness of this picture rests solely on the shoulders of a cast the like of which, in draw names and acting ability, has never been assembled before to be photographed by a camera.

Look over the list—Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery, Jean Harlow, the two Barrymores, Madge Evans, Edmund Lowe, Karen Morley, Lee Tracy, Billie Burke, Jean Hersholt, Phillips Holmes, and ten or fifteen others; everyone almost sufficient to carry any picture on his or her own shoulders.

What this business needs, what theatres must have, what fans rush to pay their money for is an ATTRACTION and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer have certainly gone the limit in giving them one with this production. That the industry will be better off as a result of it, that exhibitors will be able to pay off other weekly losses by playing it, that fans will be lured out of their hideaways and brought back to the theatre to see it, goes without saying. It's a great attraction, a satisfying picture and a credit to any and all who had anything to do with it.

And because of it, the motion picture industry owes a great debt of gratitude to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for producing it.

Some of the best performances ever seen in pictures are given by the cast of "Dinner At Eight." There will be arguments and fights for the next few months as to who is the really big star in this picture. Any and all selections can be easily defended. Accordingly, it comes down to your own opinion, based on who your favorite player is, as to which one reaches the greatest heights in this greatest of all casts. From where we sat, we pick Marie Dressler as the bright particular star of the piece, without taking away one ounce of credit from any of the twenty or more outstanding parts.

How that Dressler girl does troupe! It is worth the price of admission alone to see and hear her read the tag line of the picture to Jean Harlow at the fadeout. Boys and girls, there is not another person in pictures or on the stage, in the opinion of this reviewer, who could have gotten as much out of those few words as Miss Dressler.

Harlow tells Dressler, as they both go into dinner, "I've been reading a book. It's a nutty kind of a book. The man says that machinery will take the place of every profession." And Dressler looks her up and down, mostly down, and chirps: "Well, my dear, that's something you should never worry about."

John Barrymore gives an inspired performance as the has-been picture star. Little Harlow shows astounding improvement in this vehicle. Wallace Beery is Wallace Beery and where can you find another?

Billie Burke is the surprise hit of the show. Lionel Barrymore, as always, does things with his part that only Lionel Barrymore can do. Eddie Lowe, Lee Tracy and Madge Evans are distinct in their characterizations.

The finest thing that can be said about the casting of this picture, with all its star names, is that every star fits into his or her part like a glove. It was not a question of taking a lot of big names and throwing them into a story with the majority of them reading a line or two and then bowing out. There are big, meaty parts for everyone of the performers and how they take advantage of them!

In the case of "Dinner At Eight," the picture is far better than the play, if for no other reason than the polishing Frances Marion, Herman Mankiewicz and Donald Ogden Stewart have given the George S. Kaufman and Edna Ferber script, particularly in the last few sequences. The play was rather drab at the end. Audiences got the feeling that it was unfinished, and the final curtain left you sunk.

With the picture, some of the best bits of the whole production come at the finish, thereby lifting it to greater peaks of entertainment than was the case with the stage play.

George Cukor did a mighty job with his direction, one that would be hard to duplicate. Handling a cast of such important names, manoeuvering them in and out of scenes with each other, and successfully combating every bit of temperament, is a job that requires not only excellent direction but a diplomacy that most directors do not possess.

In addition to the job of handling all that temperament, Cukor had a tough assignment with a narrative essentially episodic. Even though the play was almost perfectly written for the stage and the screenplay was all that could be asked for, the picture had to be kept moving and that movement from one episode to another called for everything that Cukor had and that many directors lack.

Put "Dinner At Eight" down as an exceptionally fine directorial job and place Cukor higher on your list of directors as a result of it.

The story itself is probably too well known by this time to need space for its telling. The play has been a big hit in New York. Theatrical columns throughout the country have dwelt on it at great lengths. But the fact remains and stands out like a sore thumb that MGM have made a greater attraction out of it than Sam Harris. George S. Kaufman and Edna Ferber did as a play. The shortcomings of the stage hit have been mended for picture purposes. It's a cinch that all who go to see "Dinner At Eight" as a picture will be given more entertainment than they paid to see.

William Daniels, who has many extremely fine photographic accomplishments to his credit, comes through with another bit of creative photography. The sets by Hobe Irwin were a treat

To write a box office angle on this picture, with all those names to draw ticket buyers, with a big stage hit for the story and a production such as only MGM could give it, would be like telling you that this is the year 1933. Everything has been given you as a showman to make money on. If you miss out on those opportunities, then your theatre is really sunk and should be turned into some other business.

ABOUT HANGING TOGETHER

IT IS exceedingly clear that the motion picture's leaders, confronted with the necessity—and opportunity—of framing a code of practice to be applied under the new national laws of business control, must at last concern themselves with the welfare of the whole industry, and in terms that have never been realized before.

Special pleaders and servants of special interests can achieve nothing but ultimate failure of selfish purposes, but recognition of the real mutuality of interest between all of the branches of the art and arms of the business can attain much, and most likely succeed in arrangements which will permit the industry to run itself.

The time-hardened habit of trading, bickering, compromising and swapping in the deals of individual interest at the expense of the whole, must be laid aside now, or drastic consequences will be incurred. The administration at Washington obviously has it in mind that some one might as well start to try to run this country and all its industries as to let them drift in the doldrums of the uncharted depression era. The motion picture, like the rest of America's industries, has thus far mostly just muddled through, on a policy of every man for himself. Now for a while the course must be every man for the motion picture. That's what we live off of.

SCIENCE VINDICATED

A GREAT deal of what passes for scientific research is Sunday supplement twaddle, and a deal of the rest of it is merely corroborated common sense. The Motion Picture Research Council has just returned two hundred thousand dollars' worth of findings to the effect that exciting pictures excite even young children. Now the University of California has gone a-researching among families with children and finds that fifty-five per cent of the mothers prefer above all other types of players "screen lovers." We could have told the University about that. Mothers are that way. That's why they are mothers. Only three per cent of the mothers mentioned any taste for tragedies. That compares closely with the husband shooting rate in liberal communities like Chicago.

"THE public is still willing to be sold, but you do have to sell them," observes Mr. Lou Metzger of the New Spreckles Theatre out in San Diego. "I don't believe the public ever wanted more to be entertained—and never did we have less chance of fooling them." Which minds us to remark that in showmanship and the world of entertainment there is a vast difference between deceit and illusion. The audience wants the illusion and hates the deceit—that's what's wrong with fakery in show selling.

"SHORT SIGHTED"

LAST Saturday Mr. Red Kann put together a special "short number" of Motion Picture Daily, with many a poignant word from his own pen and from capable personages in the industry about the general neglect and lack of competent, enthusiastic showmanship to be found generally in the field of short production, selling and exhibition.

Glancing through the pages, we find Mr. David Loew saying: "We wouldn't book a short without seeing it even if it was to show only once." And that brings us to wondering what percentage of the shorts displayed in the theatres are screened before they are booked. A conservative guess is that more than half are bought and shown "sight-and-unseen" by the exhibitor. Present selling and distribution methods, to be sure, make it none too easy to screen all of the product in advance—but the best showmen do it.

It is not apparently understood in large sectors of the trade that the public values its time spent looking at shorts at just as much per minute as in looking at dramatic features. The public has no notion that shorts are "fillers" or that they cost less or mean less than the rest of the show. And the public is the customer.

"DYNAMIC new players" are especially needed by the screen just now, according to a West Coast quotation from Mr. William LeBaron. Perhaps; but, we ask, just how does a player get or stay dynamic in the languor of a land that was made for raising oranges.

THIS TIME O' YEAR

OUR friends and correspondents are advised that it is requested that all communications relating to trout, bass, and the stage of the water on the Humber, the Saguenay, the Nipigon and the Arrow Lakes be timed to arrive on Fridays. Our Monday mail is at present not conducive to concentration on the movies. Special notice is given that professional fisherman, Mr. J. C. Jenkins. Incidentally, while our mind is on the subject, it is to be observed that not even the Administration's best friend has thought to explain that President Roosevelt's reforestation movement will be great for the brook trout. Forest shade keeps the waters cool enough for the fontanalis, whereas it is a bald and tree-ravished landscape that has given us that makeshift, the brown trout, a fish made for hot water, rather than for fishermen. We prefer our trout browned in the pan, not in the brook.

JACK-RABBIT SHOWMEN

Popping sharply, suddenly into sight, disappearing equally quickly, much in the fashion of the jack-rabbit, is a new, annoying competition to small-town exhibitors, chiefly in the open west. Traveling shows, these bounding circuits, using inferior equipment, do their popping for the most part in towns where theatres are dark—or minus. Little need is there, apparently, for a theatre, the town hall, or street serving the purpose. Often merchants foot the bill, the public admitted free. Difficult is the imposition of a check-rein on the jack-rabbits, since far-flung places form their hutch. From the Copyright Protection Bureau comes warning that exchanges selling product to rabbit operators should make contract specification of exhibition towns. To exhibitors, competition; to distributors, lost rental from the poppers. . . .

MORAL GUNPLAY

Strictly, declares producer Universal, will its projected Buck Jones serial, "Gordon of Ghost City," adhere to the Association of Motion Picture Producers' newly formulated moral code, as concerns gunplay. The code: "use of firearms restricted to essentials. . . . theft, robbery, safe-cracking, dynamiting of trains, etc., not to be detailed in method." Necessarily sugar-coated will therefore be Peter B. Kyne's story. Back to the screen, in the feminine lead, will come once notable Madge Bellamy. Yet may Miss Bellamy fill the shoes of yesterday's famed Pearl White, be the answer to Carl Laemmle Junior's problem of a star for Universal's remake of the great White triumph, "The Perils of Pauline." . . .

PROUD RIBBER

Proud, pleased as punch was America's premier Congressional ribber, Fox star Will Rogers, on his last radio broadcast last Sunday. Chortling, mouthing into the "mike" from Hollywood, inimitable Will read a wire from 47 U. S. Senators and Vice President Garner: ". . . Does that mean you will not preside over us again. . . . We want your assurance you will soon return." . . . Beside Fox Film, Rogers' chief source of income is the U. S. Congress, forming the butt of his sallies. . . .

THEATRE'S BANK

Unique in the annals of the "legitimate" stage, where plans and propositions are legion, is the newly instituted National Theatregoers' Association, Inc., "banking institution for the theatre," announced last week by its president, Crosby Gaige, producer, as an attempt "to assemble the creative brains of the theatre under one roof and allow them to function without interference." Two classes of stock, with a par value total of $6,000,000, will finance the association. The idea was Vice-president L. E. Detwiler's; chief financial mogul is Spreckels Sugar Company's Rudolph Spreckels, chairman of the board, who calls the association not a bank, "merely a cooperative financing group on a nation-wide basis." Members of the profession may take Class B stock; in the fall, when it is hoped to start production, Mr. and Mrs. Theatregoer may take Class A shares, thereby become a "partner with the producer," albeit rather silent. . . .

PLAY-DOCTOR

Known far and wide for many a long year as that rarest of all stage geniuses, a brilliant "play-doctor," Winchell Smith, in his 62nd year, last weekend, at his home in Farmington, in Connecticut, finally succumbed to dread arterial sclerosis, the culmination of several months of critical illness. Actor, playwright, producer, stage director, "Billy" Smith won the greater portion of his millions through his uncanny ability to revamp, revitalize the brain children of others. Magic was his touch of renovation. Greatest of his plays were "Brewster's Millions," written with Byron Ongley, and "Lightnin'," with Frank Bacon, both performance record breakers of their day. With "Billy" Smith's death, another page in the theatre's history is turned. . . .

LOST MEMORY

Casually one day early this week did Mary Dorne, film, stage actress, glance at a newspaper in Santa Monica, start suddenly, reach for the telephone, call her playwright husband, Eugene Walter, in Los Angeles. From a story, a picture in the paper, Actress Dorne suddenly realized she had been missing from her home since a shopping tour of last Saturday. To the medico Miss Dorne's momentary lapse was "locative amnesia," to the layman merely loss of memory, aftermath of an operation some three years ago. . . .

FAIR'S "HOLLYWOOD"

No desire, apparently, had the industry of the motion picture to be represented at Chicago's World's Fair when plans were broached initially. Since has come something of a change of heart, as a construction firm, Rosenthal, Cornell & Dwyer, going "on its own," built "Hollywood" at the Fair, with two theatres, one showing how the wheels go round, the other broadcasting, packed the houses, "stole" the Fair last Friday night. Graciously have its sponsors invited industry cooperation, without cost of facilities. To the Fair already has gone MGM's Leo, the Lion, and Universal, with a nationwide screen-beauty contest; the prize: trip to the Fair, short Universal contract. Yet may the motion picture "go to the Fair." . . .

VARIED CAREER

Long, varied has been the career of the old, barn-like Hippodrome theatre on New York's elevated-shadowed Sixth avenue. Once, in the yesterday of the stage's heyday, it was the home, annually, of a musical extravaganza of huge proportions—for that day. Then a lapse, a turn to the screen, first under RKO, with vaudeville, then without, then with. To Cecil Maberry, Midwestern exhibitor, went the house last winter, with 15 and 25 cents as admission. Now another step for the old Hipp. In lieu of summer closing, Exhibitor Maberry has introduced nothing less than Grand Opera at 25 and 50 cents—and apparently successfully. Not yet is the Hippodrome a competitor of Madison Square Garden. . . .

CIVIL MERIT

Stiffly, formally at attention stood a detachment of the Republican Guard one day last week as the City of Paris, impersonated for the moment by Municipal Counsellor Oscar Dufrenne, with fanfare and trumpets, conferred, "for Civil Merit," the Order of the City of Paris on Hollywood's Ramon Novarro. More important to Hollywood producers, unfortunately, are bankers' orders than "Civil Orders." . . .

1,422 NEW INDEPENDENT ACCOUNTS ARE CREATED

Decentralizing in Paramount Publix, Fox and RKO Circuits Presents Wider Field for Distributors Next Season

Follows Tracing of Losses to Top-heavy Theatre Expansion; Home Office Buying Limited to 700 to 800 Houses

by FRED AYER

The great program of decentralization is practically completed. A total of 1,422 new independent buying accounts has been established by the breaking down of three large producer-owned circuits, begun even before the period of receiverships. Properties involved are primarily those of Paramount Publix, Fox Theatres and RKO. Motion picture distributors, large and small, are thereby presented with an opportunity unprecedented since the inception of large circuit operation to market their product on a basis of competition more widespread and more equal than ever before. The 1,422 independent accounts which have merged from the decentralization programs are practically all identified with former operators. Many closed theatres have been reopened in instances where houses reverted to landlords or to new owners. And the total may be swelled by 100 more accounts through decentralizing among other circuit owners.

One result of this development is the reemployment of many film salesmen by large distributors who, in all probability, will also engage new men to handle these new accounts. Where there previously were approximately 2,500 theatre accounts closed in New York, the new season approaches with only 700 or 800 accounts to be handled from home offices. In the future, selling will be done in the field itself for the most part, and the decentralized houses will be able, for the first time in years, to have the benefit of localized buying adapted to the taste of the community.

Top-heavy Expansion Blamed

Many of the tremendous losses which the industry suffered in the general business recession have been traced to top-heavy theatre expansion and centralized operations. It has been proved that individually-owned theatres, or groups of theatres, contained within reasonably workable territorial circuits, are in a position better to serve the individual community and generally find better reactions at the box-offices. The overhead cost of such groups is not as heavy and the picture needs of each territory are better administered.

Paramount Publix started a decentralization program many months before the company went into receivership, but the movements at Fox and RKO began with the court actions.

A year ago there were reports and widespread discussions of theatre poolings as a means to reduce overhead expenses and fixed charges. Such a move was considered among executives of RKO, Warners, Loew's and Paramount Publix, but little came of it.

Warners, not involved in any receivership, has dropped a few non-paying houses in some sections but at the same time is engaged in acquisition of more houses, making careful selections as to localities and general conditions, however.

Universal disposed of most of its theatres several years ago. It is, therefore, not concerned with decentralization activities.

NEXT WEEK

The first detailed listing, by theatre name and location, of disposition of circuit holdings of Paramount Publix, Fox and RKO in the decentralization movement, will appear in next week's issue of Motion Picture Herald.

Home Offices Maintain Interest

Executives contacted in connection with the decentralization movement were unanimous in opposing the use of the term "decentralization," saying that the word implies complete divorcement of theatres from home office participation. They pointed out that while actual buying control of the majority of theatres rested in the hands of the operators, the home offices maintain heavy interest on a partnership basis and in many cases continue to handle financing and labor arrangements.

In the case of Paramount Publix, with its far-flung circuit, practically every operating subsidiary is in receivership or bankruptcy. Receivers and trustees were appointed and vested with powers to buy film, employ labor and, in many instances, to direct financing. At the same time the parent corporation retains interest ranging from 15 to 75 per cent. Comparatively few theatres have been turned back to landlords or to new companies and even fewer leases have been cancelled or disaffirmed. The number of houses which have actually been closed is negligible.

Paramount is making an effort to retain its hold on the largest theatre circuit which, at its peak, comprised 1,300 theatres in the United States, Canada and abroad. It is expected that when all subsidiaries are clear of receivership, the partnership basis of operation will be maintained as the most effective and economical. The theatre reorganization committee, headed by S. A. Lynch, is planning to set up partnerships all over the country.

Fox and RKO Situations

The Fox situation is less involved. The three chief circuits, Fox West Coast, Fox Midland and Fox Rocky Mountain, are all in receivership. Sub-operating companies were formed for many of the theatres and in this way approximately 50 per cent of theatres in these three circuits were saved from receivership. In the East, Fox-New England was turned over to Harry Arthur, Fox Metropolitan was split up among Randforce, Skouras and several others, and in the Midwesco situation most of the houses went back to the Saxe brothers. Fox, however, is maintaining partial control from its home office, though operating receivers are handling buying.

RKO is the least involved of the three. The smallest of these major circuits, it had 159 theatres before receivership claimed 52 of them. The Orpheum Circuit went into bankruptcy and promptly was dropped from RKO supervision. Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation relinquished 23 and B. F. Keith two. Control of the remaining circuit is being maintained from the home office, with all film buying handled there.

Following is a detailed account of the rise and decline of producer-owned circuits.

The sequence of events that precipitated the decentralizing movement can be traced back to the year 1928, when the transition to sound really got under way, though Paramount had been building its theatre holdings considerably before that time. In 1928, however, Fox acquired West Coast Theatres, Warner Bros. took over the Stanley circuit, and RCA entered the motion picture field, buying FBO and Keith-Albee-Orpheum.

The talking picture was still a comparative novelty to the public, and the film industry was enjoying one of its greatest booms. Indeed, despite the stock market crash in late 1929 pictures continued to roll up enormous scores at the box office, and it was not until 1931 that this industry began to feel acutely the general business retrogression. Suddenly the public stopped spending and theatre closings started overnight.

PARAMOUNT PUBLIX CHANGES

On Tuesday, April 26, 1932, Adolph Zukor took the floor at a meeting of Paramount Publix stockholders. In a dramatic session of questioning by Attorney Nathan Burkan, Mr. Zukor explained certain details of Paramount Publix's financial and operating conditions. Among other things disclosed was the fact that the first quarter of 1932 showed an operating deficit of approximately $1,236,000 after depreciation. A bank credit of $13,000,000 had been arranged to meet company requirements, amounting, at that time, to $10,000,000. A 100 per cent-owned Paramount subsidiary was formed as a holding company to work out legal details. There was some discussion from the floor about the wholesale theatre acquisitions by Publix during 1929 and 1930. Mr. Zukor answered questions frankly, testified that "since economic conditions have changed, those investments have depreciated in value."

Later in the same year, July, 1932, the company reported cash on hand amounting to $6,000,000, plus a $5,000,000 line of credit, four-fifths unused. The corporation and its subsidiaries owned some 1,700 pieces of real estate having a value upward of $260,000,000, as shown by an independent appraisal in 1931. Against the properties were outstanding obligations aggregating some $70,000,000.

Then Decentralization. On Friday, Oct. 28, 1932, Sam Katz resigned as vice-president of Paramount Publix. His resignation was said to have been the result of differences of opinion between him and the company's executive committee on the matter of decentralization of theatre management. The committee, and executives of the theatre department, were in favor of a complete policy of decentralization, with full authority in the field subject only to supervision from New York. Mr. Katz believed in centralized management.

At its peak of development, the Paramount Publix circuit, under close control of Mr. Katz and the New York home office, held 1,200 theatres, operated by law and rule and formula at long range across the nation. Mr. Katz had built his domain of exhibition into an institution which tended to overshadow even the production and exhibition structure. Coincident with the arrival of the depression in this industry's midst and the subsequent fall of box-office receipts, the real estate and theatre commitments of the corporation created serious financial problems. Since 1926 the Paramount Publix theatre circuit had expanded into almost every corner of the United States and Canada. Deals had been made with A. H. Blank, in Illinois, Iowa and Nebraska; with W. S. Butterfield, who had large holdings in Michigan; hundreds of properties were bought from Sparks in Florida and Clinton and Myers in Minnesota. Saenger's circuit in the South was acquired, as were the Kunsky and Trendle interests in Michigan; Maine and New Hampshire theatres in New England, the Northwest Theatre Circuit, M. A. Shea's houses in upper New York and Canada. Wilby, Kincey, Lucas and Baum holdings in Alabama, Georgia and the Carolinas, and Comerford theatres in New York and Pennsylvania. The Gray Circuit was acquired in New England, and Walter Reade's theatres in New Jersey, along with scores of others.

Repurchases a Problem

At least 200 theatres had been acquired in 1929 and 1930 by partial cash payments and the remainder in stock with a guarantee to buy back a few years later, at prices ranging from 20 to 25 per cent higher than at the time the deals were made. When the company's stock went downward, with all others, difficulties arose as the repurchases became due.

From the time of Sam Katz's resignation in October, Paramount Publix embarked upon a drastic program of decentralization. By late November, 1932, the following progress was noted:

The entire Paramount corporate structure was decentralized into four subsidiaries, each to handle certain departmental functions — Paramount Pictures Corp., Paramount Distributing Corp., Paramount Productions, Inc., and Paramount International Corp.

E. V. Richards repurchased an interest in the Saenger Circuit and assumed management of the Southern properties of which he was formerly a principal owner.

Nathan Goldstein acquired an interest in and management of the former circuit of Goldstein Brothers in New England.

Reports were current that George Trendle was negotiating for Publix properties in Detroit which he formerly operated.

R. J. O'Donnell assumed operation of 23 Publix theatres in Texas.

Management of the Publix circuit was virtually vested in a triumvirate, headed by Sam Dembow, Jr., and including Dave Chatkin and Milton Feld.

The management established a complete new executive setup for the circuit.

Division managers from the home office and film bookers were sent into the field to localize operation further.

Decision was made to continue budget control in New York, in most instances.

Several months before the turning back of those theatres heretofore listed, houses had been returned to E. J. Sparks, Wilby-Kincey and Ed Dubinsky.

PARAMOUNT

Operator buying film: 899 houses.

Turned back to landlords or new owners: 85 theatres.

Theatres closed, leases cancelled or disaffirmed: 47 (plus all but six Publix-Nebraska).

Although the company refused at that time to divulge the exact relations of either party to profit and losses, it was understood that the decentralization program would provide for three distinct types of arrangements, including:

Continued ownership and management of Publix properties with localized operation by home office representatives in the field and budgetary control remaining in the home office; secondly, deals such as those which included disposition of about 23 houses in Texas to W. K. Jenkins and Mr. O'Donnell; Saenger theatres to Mr. Richards; four in Minnesota to Eddie E. Ruben; about 20 in Massachusetts to Mr. Goldstein and houses along the Atlantic Seaboard in the South, to Wilby-Kincey. In these the new operators obtained an interest, it was understood, and full authority to manage without interference from New York. The third arrangement embraced outright disposition, which was said to include about 30 theatres in Florida which had been turned over to Mr. Sparks several months before, and a dozen in Kansas City and Missouri which Mr. Dubinsky acquired in the early fall of 1932.

65% Decentralized in January

In January, 1933, Publix was reported to be 65 per cent decentralized. Fifty theatres had been returned to M. E. Comerford, and there were the deals just mentioned. By January 28 it was reported that Publix had completed its program of decentralization, with operators of various units vested with 90 per cent authority over their theatre charges, and the remaining 10 per cent, consisting largely of budgetary supervision, under home office control.

On January 26, Adolph Zukor and Charles D. Hilles were appointed temporary co-receivers in equity for Paramount Publix Corporation. At the same time, Irving Trust Company was appointed receiver for Publix Enterprises, Inc., which filed a voluntary bankruptcy petition, listing assets at $24,864,076 and liabilities at $41,214,407. George Topliff was designated by Irving Trust as its representative in charge of the Publix receivership, directing future operations of the corporation.

Interest in 1,340 Houses

The board of the corporation, in a statement pertaining to the receivership, said of Publix's position:

"The corporation has earnestly striven to obtain voluntary adjustments of rentals and other fixed charges and has taken advantage of every available means in attempting to maintain a ratio between fixed charges and receipts approximating that which existed in recent and more prosperous years of the company's history. Constructive and helpful though these efforts have been, they have been precluded from attaining their ultimate end by the prolongation and acuteness of the depression."

At the time of the Publix voluntary petition the corporation acknowledged an interest in 1,340 theatres, 1,100 of which were in the United States and 240 in Canada and abroad.

Principal creditors of Publix Enterprises were Paramount Publix Corp. and Publix Theatres Corp. Principal individual assets of Publix were stock held in the following corporations by Publix Enterprises, Inc.; Atlanta Enterprises, Inc.; A. H. Blank Theatre Corp., and Tennessee Enterprises, Inc. Other major assets included debts on open accounts from the following sources:

A. H. Blank Theatre Corp., Paramount Enterprises, Inc., Southern Enterprises of Texas, St. Petersburg (Fla.) Enterprises, Inc., and the Toledo Paramount Corp. Minor liabilities involving unsecured claims were listed for many of Publix's theatre subsidiaries.

Coincidentally with activities in New York, receivers were appointed elsewhere for numerous affiliated circuit corporations: E. V. Richards, president of the Saenger Theatres, Inc., was appointed receiver for those theatres, Paramount Publix claimed Saenger owed it $6,000, A. H. Blank was named operating receiver for A. H. Blank Theatres Corp. of Nebraska, and Publix-Nebraska; William Hamm became receiver in St. Paul for Minnesota Amusement Co., northwest operating subsidiary of Paramount Publix Corp., for about 70 theatres. Previously, receivers had been asked for Fitzpatrick and McElroy, a 21 theatre circuit operating in Indiana and Ohio.

Permanent Receiver Named

Later in February, William Bundy Bartels was appointed ancillary receiver for Paramount Publix in Ohio. During the same week Publix darkened 14 New Jersey theatres, 11 of which were formerly operated by Walter Reade, who had been negotiating for re-possession; E. M. Loew in Boston sued six Paramount Publix theatre units for $2,000,000, alleging monopoly; Olympia Theatres, a subsidiary operating about 50 houses out of Boston, was placed in receivership, and temporary receivers were named, as was a receiver for Publix Ohio Theatres.

Still later in Febuary, a permanent receiver was named for another Publix subsidiary, Rhode Island Theatres, Inc., and Henry C. Stickelmaier, Publix division manager at Chicago, with jurisdiction over the Indiana and Ohio territories, was selected to operate all Ohio houses fo rthe receiver, Al. E. Rubens. The two temporary receivers for Olympia Theatres, Inc., were continued in Boston.

Early in March a petition asking equity receivership for Balaban & Katz Corp., owners of controlling interest in 35 theatres in Chicago and suburbs, was filed in Chicago federal district court. Paramount Publix owns 96 per cent of B. & K. common stock. The petition, filed by the holder of a note for $1,000, was dismissed the following week. During the same week Mr. Topliff announced that the receivers of Publix Enterprises had effected rent reductions approximating 50 per cent in about 20 theatres; Mr. Blank said he was contemplating the closing of 25 theatres in the A. H. Blank and Publix-Nebraska circuits. On June 13 came word he had closed all but six in the Publix-Nebraska group.

During the week ending March 11 several facts were brought to light. At a creditors' meeting the receivers' report stated that Paramount Publix's loss for the nine months ended Oct. 1, 1932, amounted to $7,553,411 before allowing for depreciation of fixed charges, and $15,857,344 after allowing for depreciation.

Voluntary Petition March 14

On Tuesday, March 14, Paramount Publix Corp. filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy, listing liabilities of $55,317,767 and assets of $153,748,885. The company had been in equity receivership since January 26. Meanwhile, Albert E. Ruben had been appointed trustee in

INDUSTRY SETS UP CODE MACHINERY AS CONGRESS PASSES RECOVERY ACT

Coordinating Committee Will Weld Drafts Already Being Prepared Individually by Separate Divisions of Industry

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

The motion picture industry this week established the machinery for drafting a code of fair competition and business practice under President Roosevelt's Industrial Recovery Act, which was finally approved by Congress late Tuesday as the Administration's biggest step in returning the nation to normalcy. Mr. Roosevelt on Wednesday ordered that the bill be in motion within 30 days. The basic steps for formulating a code of regulation for and by the motion picture industry follow:

1. Producers will draft a production code.
2. Distributors will write a code governing distribution.
3. Representatives of all groups in exhibition will formulate a draft for exhibition.
4. A committee of coordinators will weld together these three forms into one industry code.

Each code will be drafted separately by the various trade associations in each of the three principal divisions. No one branch will have an interfering voice in the writing of a code by another branch, but the appointed coordinators representing each branch will be vested with the power to adjust conflicting phases of the three codes.

There will be 12 coordinators, as follows: two representing producers; two to be appointed by distributors and two each representing the MPTOA, Allied States, affiliated circuits and unaffiliated circuits. Ed Kuykendall, president, and Fred Meyer were elected MPTOA coordinators on Wednesday, with Jay Emanuel alternate.

Basis for Production Code Exists

The production code will be formulated principally by the Association of Motion Picture Producers, to which belong all large studios and many smaller companies. The independent producers will also be consulted regarding their views. The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in Hollywood will participate when the relations of employee to employer are being established. Whether studio unions and other Hollywood associations of creative workers will have a hand in drafting the form has not been made clear.

The basis for the producers' draft will be the industry's Production Code, which now governs the moral phases. This was adopted by the AMPP and ratified by the board of the MPPDA, on March 31, 1930. It was subscribed to individually by Art Cinema (United Artists); Christie Film, Columbia, Cecil B. De Mille Productions, Educational, First National, Fox, Gloria Productions, Samuel Goldwyn, Inspiration, Harold Lloyd Corp., Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount, Pathe Studios, RKO, Hal Roach Studios, Mack Sennett, Tiffany Productions, Universal, Warner Brothers.

The provisions regulate the picturization of crime, sex, vulgarity, obscenity, dances, profanity, indecent costumings, religion, national feelings, salacious titles, hangings, third degree methods, brutality, gruesomeness, branding of people or animals, cruelty to children or animals, surgical operations, and the like. Machinery for interpretation exists in Hollywood in the nature of a special committee of the AMPP operating under Mr. James Wingate.

The Advertising Code, governing practices of members of Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, was adopted June 6, 1930, and has to do with false and misleading advertising and publicity statements and illustrations and text of a distorted nature, or that which is salacious, profane, vulgar, unfair, criminal. Heretofore, companies which are not members of the MPPDA have not been governed either by the present Production Code or by the Advertising Code.

Distribution Code

The code governing distribution will be written by members of the Hays organization and by the representatives of independent distributors. The MPPDA distributor members already operate under what virtually constitutes a code of regulations. However, suggestions by independent distributors will be studied. Principal independent distributor units are Tobias Keppler's Progressive MPPDA, recently formed in New York, and one now being formed by P. S. Harrison.

Mr. Harrison sent notices on Tuesday to "all the independent producers and distributors" to be on hand Wednesday at 8 p.m. at the Park Central Hotel in New York "so as to authorize some one to represent" them in incorporating into a distribution code the needs of such independents.

Mr. Keppler, a motion picture attorney, said last week, "while the non-majors are desirous of getting a code that they feel would give them necessary protection, this is not to be construed as being antagonistic to the Hays organization, because after our code is agreed upon it is our intention to try to get the Hays organization to consent to it so as to avoid any unnecessary conflict and to aid the industry in working in complete harmony."

Representatives of the large distributors commissioned to prepare clauses said this week that their form probably will contain a plank compelling all companies to use the standard exhibition contract, and no other, and also the optional arbitration setup as a basis. Both the contract and the optional arbitration system were agreed to by most companies last year. The MPTOA already has ratified the standard license. This contract, when adopted as a part of the proposed distribution-exhibition code, will probably iron out those difficulties which usually arise over distributor-exhibitor agreements, providing as it does for percentage bookings, clearance and zoning, cancellations on block bookings and the like.

The MPTOA at its meeting Wednesday recommended that the arbitration system be set up immediately through regional boards of distributors and exhibitors.

Some leaders see an opportunity to adopt the board of appeals and conciliation, proposed by the MPTOA and distributors at the time the standard licensing agreement was formulated last year.

Exhibitors' Code in Work

The exhibition branch, like the others, will draw up a code through its various trade associations, principally MPTOA and Allied. In addition, the leaders will seek the assistance of all unaffiliated state and city exhibitor associations, and also the affiliated and the unaffiliated circuits. In the unaffiliated group there are approximately 85 companies, operating some 1,800 theatres.

First definite steps for an exhibition code were taken in New York, Tuesday and Wednesday, when the executive committee of the MPTOA, headed by Ed Kuykendall, new president, met to prepare a tentative draft to be presented to a general meeting at the MPPDA headquarters Thursday morning.

Present Production Code of Ethics and Advertising Agreement Will Have Place in Instrument; MPTOA and Allied Busy

MPTOA's code will be submitted to state affiliates within a few deys.

The MPTOA state conventions to discuss the code will take the form of open mass meetings for all exhibitors, whether affiliated with the association or not, who operate in the territory. The stategy behind this is to enable the MPTOA to present the exhibition code to the Administration as being the agreement of a majority of theatre owners, even though a minority group may not participate in or refuse to cooperate on drafting the code. Mr. Kuykendall will call a final meeting of the MPTOA executive committee early in July, at Chicago, to put the code in final shape for submission to the regional meetings.

Attending this week's MPTOA sessions in New York were Mr. Kuykendall, M. A. Lightman, Jack Miller, Oscar Lam, Fred Meyer, Fred Wehrenberg, David Barrist, Lew Pizor, Ed Levy and Jay Emanuel.

Mr. Kuykendall explained Wednesday afternoon that the MPTOA committee had reached definite conclusions for clauses of its code and that it would have the agreement in formal shape for the second general conference at the Hays organization on Thursday. The MPTOA code will virtually represent the contents of the standard exhibition contract, which will be a definite part of the draft, plus a few supplementary clauses. Highlights of the agreement have to do with non-theatrical competition, zoning, clearance, double featuring, arbitration, the national appeals board, exclusive runs, premiums, give-aways, indecent advertising, substitutions and the elimination and cancellation of pictures.

Kuykendall Issues Call

Following passage of the bill by the Senate late Tuesday, Mr. Kuykendall issued the following call to exhibitors to participate in the drafting of a code amicable to all:

"I viewed with a great deal of satisfaction the enactment into a law of President Roosevelt's industry control bill. Those who are sincerely interested in the fair and legitimate improvement of the motion picture industry realize fully the influence for good this bill will have upon industry by nature of its regulatory intent.

"We of the motion picture industry must immediately open our hearts and our minds in a fair attitude toward each other from the exhibitor end to the producer end. The so-called industry code is a very vital and necessary method of bringing about a fair and square understanding among those in all phases of the industry. Unless all of us get together open mindedly and in a spirit of give and take to work this code out among ourselves, the Government will surely do it for us. I cannot in my wildest imagination conceive of any individual or number of people, who know the mechanics of the motion picture industry, who would be willing for the Government to write this code for us, because they understand nothing, practically, about the actual mechanics of operation and would necessarily include in the code things that would be most obnoxious. This would particularly apply to the little independent exhibitors who are so much in the minority and unless those socalled small independents participate with the industry as a whole in the writing of the code, surely they cannot expect any consideration afterward.

"You may rest assured that the producing ends of this industry are busily engaged in writing their code. They are well organized and have an understanding among themselves. There is no reason for the theatre interests not to get together also in the same manner and in writing their code protect themselves against any inequalities or discriminations against them by the producers. Independent theatre owners sitting out by themselves are going to find themselves in a most deplorable condition when the industry code is completely worked out and accepted by the Government.

"Surely the theatre owners are not going to do this. Now is the time for the real men and women of this industry to get together across a common table inspired by the spirit of give and take and, above all, fairness, and work out a code which may be presented to the Government as a document so manifestly fair that they will accept it. It is the only way that we can hope to be equally recognized with the producers. It is the only way, as I see it, that we can force the producers to treat with us fairly and squarely on the fundamentals that regulate our buying, protection, zoning, etc.

"Finally, are you, as an exhibitor, going to line up with the vast majority of other exhibitors by lending your advice and experience, together with others, in making of the industry code the constructive, beneficial thing it should be to the exhibitors of America?

"The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America invite you and everyone interested in the industry to cooperate with them along the lines above mentioned."

Allied Directors Discuss Code

Directors of the national Allied association, assembled last Saturday at the Park Central hotel in New York, decided to leave the matter of drafting a code to its regional affiliates. Attending were Abram F. Myers, chairman; James C. Ritter, president; Sidney E. Samuelson, vice-president, and H. M. Richey, Nathan Yamins and Al Steffes.

Mr. Samuelson said Tuesday that Allied had not decided on any definite draft for a code, "although we have some very definite ideas." He indicated that these "ideas" concerned various factors against which Allied has been campaigning for two years, among them "obnoxious, unreasonable protection foisted upon independents by producers and circuits," "unfair and unreasonable percentage policies and playing arrangements practiced by several major producers and distributing organizations," "compulsory block booking," "music tax and copyright protection bureau."

Mr. Samuelson said the board also had discussed "a certain angle in the new bill which has not yet been mentioned in connection with motion picture business operation and which will give us a handle to work with."

The Allied board issued the following statement:

"The Allied board, after hearing the report of the committee which attended the industry conference Friday, was unanimously of the opinion that the problems presented by the National Industrial Recovery Act are of such far-reaching importance and impinge so directly on the interests of the theatre owners that the rank and file should be consulted through the regional associations before any definite steps are taken.

"Another reason for approaching the subject carefully is the very grave doubt which exists as to whether the act has any application to theatre operation. This doubt is engendered by the fact that the enforcement provisions are expressly limited to transactions, 'in or affecting interstate commerce.'

"There is also involved a choice of procedures on which the theatre owners should be heard. The act gives the exhibitors the right to oppose any unfair provisions which may be proposed by the producers as well as the right to appeal to the President for relief from existing abuses. Conceivably some exhibitors may hold the view that participation by Allied in the drafting of an industry code would have the effect of prejudicing the theatre owners in case they decide, or it becomes necessary, to invoke other provisions of the act.

"The Allied directors do not feel that they or any other exhibitor leaders are authorized to enter into negotiations which might have the effect of committing the theatre owners to the observance of a schedule of wages and working hours in the absence of authoritative administrative interpretations of the act and without first ascertaining the ideas and necessities of those who will be affected thereby.

"However, the board is strongly of the opinion that the theatre owners, as consumers, have a deep interest in and definite rights regarding any code which the motion picture producers and distributors may submit. Allied has made many proposals to the other branches of the industry with reference to the fair practices which they think should prevail. The opinion was expressed that if the producers would now put into effect the reforms agreed to at the Trade Practice Conference, the five-five-five conference, and the meetings last winter with Mr. Kent, great progress would be made towards placing the industry on a basis of fair competition.

"Pending the outcome of the regional conferences and the further action of the board, President Ritter and General Counsel Myers have been authorized to keep in touch with the situation and to act in any emergency so as to protect the interest of the theatre owners."

It was learned that the Allied regional meetings to discuss an exhibition code will begin late this month. The Allied directors left New York over the weekend.

Hays Launches Code Discussions

Drafting of the industry code officially got underway last Friday in New York when representatives of all branches attended an informal discussion of the new bill, upon the invitation of Will H. Hays, at the 44th Street headquarters of the MPPDA.

Present were Mr. Hays, Gabriel L. Hess and David Palfreyman, of the MPPDA; Mr. Kuykendall and M. E. Comerford, representing the MPTOA; Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the New York Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce; and the following Allied delegates: Messrs. Richey, Ritter, Steffes, Samuelson and Yamins.

After a full preliminary discussion, the meeting was adjourned until this Thursday morning. The MPTOA directors met subsequently and made sufficient progress with its draft to present it at Thursday's session.

The board of the MPPDA was in quarterly session Wednesday and discussed codes. Present were: Sidney R. Kent, Fox; Nicholas M. Schenck, MGM; Harry M. and Major Albert Warner, Warner Brothers; David Sarnoff, RCA; E. W. Hammons, Educational; Merlin Hall Aylesworth, RKO; Will H. Hays, MPPDA; Fred L. Herron, treasurer of the MPPDA; Jack Cohn, Columbia, and the following who are not directors: John E. Otterson, Erpi; George Schaefer, Paramount; Carl E. Milliken, secretary, and George Borthwick, assistant treasurer of the MPPDA.

Business Hails Recovery Act

Leaders of the nation's industries hailed the passage of the national industrial recovery act as the most important step yet taken toward restoration of prosperity.

Henry I. Harriman, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, appealed to American business to take immediate advantage of its provisions.

A spokesman for the large distributors pointed out that the measure would crystallize efforts of the last 12 years for intra-industry regulation. It was pointed out that the bill would present an opportunity to weld the several codes of self-regulation. Nor was there any doubt that the industry would take a united front.

The "National Recovery Act" (S. 1712) also provides for the construction of "useful public works," to cost about $3,300,000,000, putting millions back at work.

The policy is to "promote the organization of industry for the purpose of cooperative action among trade groups, to induce and maintain united action of labor and management under adequate governmental sanctions and supervision, to eliminate unfair trade practices, to reduce and relieve unemployment, to improve standards of labor, and otherwise to rehabilitate industry and to conserve natural resources."

Labor Relations Are Involved

Both employing groups of the film industry have been conferring with union interests for months for readjusted scales and progress has been noted in exhibition. The studio basic agreement, retroactive, was ratified this week.

Film leaders Tuesday would not venture a guess as to what motion picture trade practices might be classified as being unfair. Exhibitors predicted that socalled "unreasonable" clearance would be included, also the tying-in of features and shorts on film sales. Distributors said that exhibitors might be called upon to cease two-for-one showings, triple bills, giveaways and the like. Possible application was seen to exhibitors' campaigns to have only one projectionist.

Under the bill, codes will be approved only if the applicant is "truly representative" of the trade involved and the codes "are not designed to promote monopolies or to eliminate or oppress small enterprises and will not operate to discriminate against them." Hearings also are provided for.

Licenses for domestic industries are not to be required generally, but whenever the President finds that destructive wage or price cutting or other activities contrary to the policy are being practiced he may require business enterprises in the trade affected to take out licenses. This provision, however, is to apply for only one year at the outside.

The financing of the $3,300,000,000 bond issue for public works will be through a tax program providing for an increase in the Federal gasoline tax to 1½ cents per gallon; continuation for an additional year (to July 1, 1935) of the present 10 per cent tax on admissions over 50 cents and other special taxes in the revenue law of 1932; a tax of 5 per cent upon dividends, and a tax of $1 per $1,000 on the "adjusted declared value" of the capital stock of all active corporations, which includes producing, distribution and theatre corporations.

The value of corporations is to be set by the companies themselves. To prevent under-valuation of capital stock initially, it is provided that there shall be imposed an excess-profits tax of 5 per cent upon all income of corporations in excess of 12½ per cent of the adjusted declared value.

Revival of agitation for federal control of motion pictures was marked on Monday by the introduction by Congressman Patman of Texas of a bill providing for establishment of a federal motion picture commission, also for inspection, classifying and cataloguing of film. The Patman bill, together with all other film legislation introduced during the session, will go over until the regular session meets next January.

SHORT ANSWERS MILLIKEN, SKOURAS IN DEFENDING RESEARCH FINDINGS

Says the Real Money Is Still To Be Made Out of Motion Pictures But That Demands Full, Honest Cooperation

The motion picture industry thus far has cultivated only a small part of its potential field and industry leaders have not been sufficiently clear-sighted to see that this portion does not comprise the whole field, Rev. William Harrison Short, director of Motion Picture Research Council, said this week when asked concerning the ultimate aims of the Council's activities. It is the intention of the Council not necessarily to correct this alleged situation but to bring the fact before the public, listen to public reactions, weigh them, and then make specific recommendations, he said.

The findings of some 20 psychologists and sociologists in tests conducted with about 3,000 children in various parts of the country, will be published in the form of a nine-volume report by the Macmillan company. Already a tenth volume, written by Henry James Forman, has made its appearance. This volume, "Our Movie Made Children," is an effort made by the Council to popularize the general reports in order, to quote Rev. Mr. Short, "that they will not simply be laid upon the shelves to collect dust."

In last week's issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, the expressed reactions of William Randolph Hearst and of newspapers throughout the country were published, as were the opinions of Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and George Skouras, vice-president of Skouras Theatres Corp.

Answers Milliken and Skouras

Mr. Milliken complained that "the deductions and arguments based, one is to presume, upon all or some part of the findings of the research scientists, are being presented now, but the evidence, the findings themselves, are far from available for our examination."

Mr. Skouras complained of the influence of stage sophistication and European perversion on the ideas of American producers through their constant trips abroad.

Mr. Short answered both:

"At almost any time during the past two years Mr. Milliken might have found the desired 'evidence' or 'findings' in two different volumes on which much of the Council's reports were made," he said. "One was compiled by Mark May and the other by L. L. Thurston.

"I agree with George Skouras that our young people have been cut loose from their moorings through continued presentation of foreign customs. People who have not looked very deeply into the matter think that there is only one set of 'mores,' or habits, but each cultural group, whether it be here or abroad, has its own ways of doing certain things and each set of habits is probably perfectly good for those people who grow up under certain codes of custom. A child, however, needs to grow up under only one set of 'mores.' A dozen different sets are all too confusing for the child; they leave him at sea with himself and wide open to the gangster, sex, love and crime influences."

It is the purpose of the Council primarily to find out what the public wants, he said, but the first and immediate consideration is to get the reports published and to get all the publicity possible to bring the facts before the public. The Council realizes, said Rev. Short, that all this publicity "is hurting the picture business, but it has to be done."

Friendly to Motion Picture Art

"This has been an entirely honest effort," he said, "and has been neither friendly nor unfriendly to the motion picture industry. It is friendly to the art of the motion picture. The studies have been made on a business-like plane with a complete disregard of prejudices and the work has been done so thoroughly that opinions cannot be revised. On the other hand, if this work has the result of breaking up the prosperity of the picture 'moguls,' it would be far better than to corrupt the children of the country. We hope, however, that it will open up new fields of endeavor for both sides and pave the way to a better order of things."

Mr. Short declared that inasmuch as the motion picture industry had not been making money for some time past, the producers ought to think of something different which would make money and at the same time be satisfactory from all points of view. He pointed out that anything which tends to break down our national customs is a serious thing for the nation.

> "I do not mean that our habits are the best in the world, or that they should not be changed, but they are national," he said. "The real money is still to be made out of motion pictures, but it will take honest cooperation between the industry and everyone else concerned.
> "So far as censorship goes we do not believe it can solve such a problem as this because it can only prevent certain things from being done.
> "This problem will not be solved until there is a differentiation between types of audiences."

The research work, which has covered a period of about four years, has not discovered much, but has only emphasized the facts "which people knew already," according to Mr. Short, but he asserted the evidence has been piled up so that it can no longer be doubted.

In reference to the effects of socalled sex pictures on juveniles the Council's director said that children while not always understanding certain situations, often got together and discussed them, deriving many ideas which are unseemly in minors.

"The motion picture is the most effective instrument we have toward affecting human emotions and actions," he said, "but the motion picture today has a marked influence toward delinquency. It also, sometimes, does not have any influence on delinquency. The biggest surprise in the findings of the scientists was the remarkable manner in which children remember everything they see at the motion picture."

The public is not particularly interested in whether or not the motion picture industry makes money, he said. The chief interest of the public, he contended, is good citizenship.

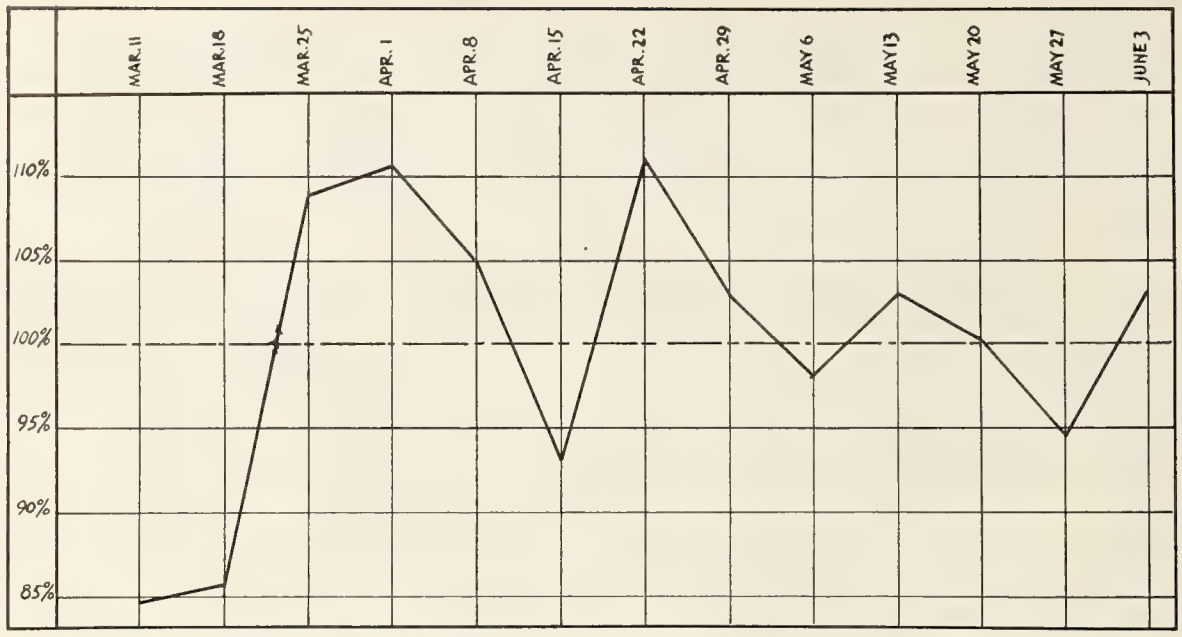
"I notice a distinct tendency in the industry," he said, "to fight anything like this work, which is advanced in a spirit of friendliness and cooperation. Now is the time to lay aside prejudices and cooperate."

Need More Good Films: Warner

Asserting that strong pictures, with proper values, are on the wane, Major Albert Warner, in a message to the industry last week, declared that unless there is a greater number of such pictures made "the industry is going to have a tough time getting along."

"Program pictures are a sign of mediocrity," he said, "and mediocrity is no weapon with which to fight for an early return to prosperity. What this industry needs more than anything else is more big, sure-fire pictures that can compete with rain, bank holidays and counter attractions such as radio, bridge, jig-saw puzzles and roller skating."

Major Warner said further that the Warner Company is through with program pictures. In his talks with exhibitors, he said, he discovered that big story properties were not necessarily important to the success of a picture and that it is not always necessary to pay big sums for the story in order to get box office successes. While not disputing that the story must be a strong one, it is Major Warner's opinion that when a producer pays too much money for it, the production of necessity must suffer, because negative costs must be kept within limits.



"The public will pay if given proper values for their money," he concluded.

Kansas City Skouras Case Continued Until June 22

Edwin V. Glaser's suit in Kansas City circuit court to have the assets of Skouras Brothers Enterprises appropriated, was continued last week until June 22 after an alias order had been issued because of faulty service on the defendants.

Duals To End in Wisconsin

Double features in Wisconsin will be prohibited after July 2. This is in accordance with action taken by exhibitors in Milwaukee county.

The graph, based on Motion Picture Herald's listings of box office grosses, indicates the relative fluctuations in the receipts from twelve key cities since the first week of the "New Deal." The thirteen weeks period covered runs from the week ending March 11 to the week ending June 3. The 100 per cent line represents the average weekly gross for the twelve cities for this period. The cities are Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, Hollywood, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, New York, Oklahoma City, Omaha, Portland, and San Francisco.

Kansas MPTA Quits MPTOA

The newly organized Kansas-Missouri Theatre Association, which, formerly known as the MPTA of Kansas and Missouri, definitely split from the MPTOA when it adopted a new constitution and by-laws at its convention in Kansas City last week, is seeking information from exhibitor members on which to base recommendations to distributors before the start of the 1933-34 selling season.

The results of the convention established the organization as an unaffiliated unit with the independents in complete control. Circuit representatives were removed from the board in the sweeping changes which took place. The association's resolution declared its willingness to cooperate with any other group but specified that it would not affiliate with any other, thus breaking the six-year connection with the MPTOA. Selective membership is an aim of the organization.

A. F. Baker of Kansas City, Kan., was elected president, succeeding E. Van Hyning, who held out for continuing the MPTOA affiliation. John C. Stapel, Rockport, Mo., was elected vice president for a third time. R. R. Biechele was named treasurer, succeeding Jay Means, resigned. All officers were elected by acclamation. New directors are: For Kansas—C. L. McVey, Herington; E. B. Danielson, Russell; Baker, Kansas City; Biechele, Kansas City; Sam Blair, Belleville; for Missouri—T. W. Edwards, Eldon; S. E. Wilhoit, Springfield; Frank Weary, Richmond; J. Stapel, Rockport.

Allied Group Outing June 19

Allied Theatres of Massachusetts will hold its annual all-day outing and get-together on June 19 at the Mayflower Hotel, Plymouth, Mass. General Daniel Needham, State Commissioner for Public Safety; Major P. F. Healey and Stanton White will be guests of honor.

N. D. Exhibitors Hit Dime Shows

First-run showings at 10 cent admissions were deplored by resolution passed at the second meeting of the newly-formed North Dakota Theatre Owners Association, held at Mandan last week. Petitions for repeal of the Sunday closing law had been mailed to members a week earlier and signers exceeded by far the required number for the expected special election.

President John Piller of Valley City called the meeting to order. G. E. Wingreene, of Bismarck, treasurer, reported the association's finances in satisfactory condition.

Other officers are R. C. Harper, New Rockford, vice-president; Anton Gilles, Wahpeton, second vice-president; G. A. Troyer, Rugby, secretary, and W. S. Boom, Ellendale, auditor. The board includes Frank Wetzstein of Mandan; John Kennelly, Mandan; C. F. Hanson, Bismarck; F. P. Aamoth, Fargo; Hans J. Peterson, Jamestown; A. B. Cooper, Lisbon.

State Association Leaves MPTOA

The MPTO of Connecticut, with headquarters in New Haven, has withdrawn from the MPTOA following action taken at the recent annual meeting. The association will be operated as an independent state unit in the future. Plans are underway for participation of the organization in any discussions to be held for the formulation of an industry code under the federal control law.

Re-elected as officers of the association were: president, Dr. J. B. Fishman; first vice-president, Adolph Johnson; second vice-president, Morris Shulman; treasurer, Edwin S. Raffile; executive secretary, Edward G. Levy; chairman of the board, William J. Brennan.

Paramount Publix Sues 12 Banks

Paramount Publix this week named as defendants eight banks in New York and four banks in other cities in an action filed in federal court, New York, by the trustees in bankruptcy. The suit charges that Film Productions Corp., a subsidiary, had been organized pursuant to a plan to make the banks preferred creditors. The trustees demanded that transfers of assets, including films to Film Productions and other subsidiaries be set aside by court order. The company alleges it was insolvent at the time the transactions took place. The defendants were given 20 days to file an answer.

Federal Judge Coleman, U. S. district court, New York, on Wednesday denied motions brought by Samuel Zirn, attorney for a minority group of Paramount bondholders, seeking the removal of Charles D. Hilles, Eugene W. Leake and Charles E. Richardson as Paramount Publix trustees and the ousting of Referee Henry K. Davis from further association with the case for alleged bias.

Another move of prime importance in the Paramount case was the acceptance of a bid from Louis Marcus for a 50 per cent interest in the Publix-Salt Lake circuit. Marcus agreed to take care of current debts of the circuit up to $38,000 and in addition will make advances for current financing up to $35,000. Meanwhile, other developments included the request to creditors to ratify the transfer of Paramount Publix assets to the four major subsidiaries last November; announcement of reorganization plans for Publix theatres has been held up; continuance of company subsidiaries in order to safeguard continued operation of production and distribution was approved by the trustees; also that Paramount emerged from its investment in Columbia Broadcasting System with a profit, despite the fact that it acquired its 50 per cent interest in 1929 by the issuance of stock which was guaranteed to repurchase at $85 per share in March, 1932, was brought to light in the testimony of Ralph A. Kohn late last week before Referee Henry K. Davis.

Out in the field the chief item of interest was the reported closing of 15 theatres in Iowa and Nebraska by A. H. Blank.

Efforts to untangle the Fox Midland-Rocky Mountain controversy are being shifted to New York, with representatives arriving there this week to confer with Chase National Bank representatives and Sidney R. Kent, president. Three leaders are Elmer C. Rhoden, M. B. Shanberg and Herbert M. Woolf. Meanwhile Spyros Skouras denied late last week reports prevalent in Kansas City that the Fox theatres reorganization would return a number of houses to Mr. Rhoden and Mr. Shanberg. Lawyers in New York are now working on plans for the reorganization of Fox Metropolitan, with Randforce and George Skouras continuing their present operating setups.

South Dakotans Plan Association

The organization of a South Dakota association of independent exhibitors is under discussion at the moment in Sioux Falls. With the movement are identified Charles Lee Hyde of Pierre and Milt Pay of Sioux Falls.

Benjamin Berger, president of the Northwest Allied organization, attended conferences on the proposal last week.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Packing parachutes for motion picture stunt fliers, or others who jump from a plane in midair, is a trick. In busy airports, "riggers" do nothing else. Working on a 40-foot table, a "rigger" can pack a 'chute in one hour. He folds the big umbrella in pleats, putting on top the little pilot 'chute which drags the larger one out of the bag. Before a "rigger" can be licensed by the aviation authorities he must pack 20 'chutes, weight them with sandbags and toss them from a speeding plane. If any fail to open, he doesn't get his license. If he does get a license and then the 21st parachute refuses to open for an aviator in an emergency, the "rigger" usually evidences sympathy and "chips in" for flowers.

The nomination is seconded.

Because of the release system and the protection which is now in effect, hundreds of independent exhibitors are not able to obtain holiday shorts until weeks, sometimes months after the holiday or the event has taken place—which results in some peculiar booking arrangements. There are cases where exhibitors were running Christmas reels all the way into Lent. Many reels about Christmas and New Year's arrived on Washington's Birthday.

At the instigation of Aaron Saperstein, president of Allied in Chicago, Commissioner Abram Fern Myers, national chairman of Allied, took the matter up with distributors. Several have already joined in condemning the practice.

Every day, between 12 noon and 2, Warner Brothers practically halt activities at the home office and concentrate on the important business of feeding the staff. The company is the only one in New York's film industry which operates an employees' restaurant, where hot dishes and cold may be purchased at a minimum. Twenty-five cents buys roast chicken, with two vegetables. After lunch, athletic devices are available for the elimination of surplus avoirdupois.

An "electric palate," or Electrynx, that tastes and indicates on a meter the ripeness of apples, oranges, lemons and other fruits and vegetables by measuring their acidity, has been developed by Westinghouse engineers. The small portable device also registers the acid content of tea and coffee. The Electrynx was primarily designed for the measuring of the minute currents that flow through photoelectric tube circuits, or "electric eyes," that are used in sound projectors. The device is so sensitive that it records the action of one-millionth of an ampere. That's equal to about one-tenth of the "wing power" of a horse fly.

DIETRICH'S PANTS CAUSE CONTINENTAL COMPLICATIONS

The Detroit Free Press, in referring last week to a German girl who had attained some notice in American films and who walked down the streets of Paris in male clothing, says it was not on the grounds of morals that the French police threatened to arrest her—

Entomologist George Ethelbert Sanders, of the American Museum of Natural History, recently sent a shiver through New York by waking it to the fact that for the first time it is seriously infested by termites. Time Magazine then reported that termites do yearly damage estimated at $29,000,000 to farm buildings in the South, and that there are over 1,200 species of termite, some 40 of them in the United States.

New York's variety builds its labyrinthine nests in the soil beneath theatre and other buildings, crawls up into wooden beams and floors. It eats from the inside so that owners are unaware of damage until shell-like or spongy timbers collapse. Dr. Sanders reported that at least one theatre in the Times Square district is being undermined.

The Broadway Association would rid the world's best known thoroughfare of its cheapness—and that goes for the lusty barkers in front of picture palaces, too. From the day that an advertising display depicting galloping horses in action in a Roman chariot race was erected at Times Square, the trend of Broadway has been to the garish, until the district today shrieks of the cheap and the shoddy—somewhat representative of an exploding comic supplement. The Broadway Association has a movement afoot to transform the street to the subdued but gay and enticing Broadway which the present generation never saw.

However, he got into so many other things that the students stormed his quarters, tore up his bed and dipped him in the lake. This, of course, did not quench his ardor. He is ever swept by great enthusiasms. The other day he alighted on a Fifth Avenue tailor, saw some patterns he liked and ordered five suits all at once.

DISTRIBUTORS NEARLY SET WITH PLANS AND PRODUCT FOR 1933-34

Rounding Out Complete Arrangements for New Year as Conventions Draw Near; Independent Production Big Factor

Motion picture distributors are nearing the zero hour of one of the keenest competitive engagements ever staged for the business of supplying films to theatres. Within ten days, gavels will sound the opening of annual sales conventions of distributors, signaling the official start of the 1933-34 season.

Discussions between distributors and their production affiliates about feature and short subject programs for the new season have until now been held for the most part to broad generalities and to numerical quotas. All companies are now getting down to cases, and between this date and June 26, when both Paramount and Radio launch their conventions, complete product announcements and merchandising plans will have been rounded out, for simultaneous presentation to sales forces in the field and to buyers of screen entertainment for some 13,000 theatres.

Agreement of all large companies not to hold sales meetings until the last week of June, or later, has since been extended to embrace the withholding of complete product details until they are presented at the conventions, this so that all companies will be on an equal footing in the sales competition. However, MOTION PICTURE HERALD during recent weeks has presented piece-meal details of new programs as they were rounded out by the companies.

Decentralization and the New Season

By convention time, most distributors will have completed an expansion of their sales forces, in order to serve extended localized film buying which resulted from decentralization of some 1,500 circuit theatres. (The first complete report of the extent of decentralization of theatres appears in this issue starting on page 9.)

The return of many pioneer producers to independent production, after they had been involved for many years in home office or corporate management of large companies, is expected to raise the quality of pictures above the standard of mass production.

Socalled "outside" producers will contribute feature product to the 1933-34 release schedules of Fox, Paramount, RKO Radio, United Artists and Universal, while Columbia, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Warner Brothers have in recent weeks expanded production executive personnel. In addition, practically every large company will distribute short product made by independents.

Possible Effect of Industry Code

Adoption by the motion picture industry of a code of operation, as provided for in President Roosevelt's new industrial control bill, is expected to better the relations between buyer and seller of films. Inasmuch as such a code might change some field phases of merchandising, revisions in sales policies by distributors are possible. This situation is reported in detail on page 11.

Of considerable importance to those executives both in New York and Hollywood who make up production programs, is the need for additional shorts as a result of curtailed double featuring activities. According to MOTION PICTURE DAILY, short subject production for 1933-34 is heading for a 50 per cent increase over 1932-33, as a result of the decline of dual bills. It was learned this week that several companies already are contemplating production of three- and four-reel subjects to take the place of the second feature.

A widespread demand is seen for musical shorts and for "big names" in one and two reelers.

Acquisitions of new talent and stories and the awarding of new contracts for old box-office names were numerous during the week on the Coast, as most of the major studios got their new season's production plans underway.

Twenty Broadway stage players have been signed for picture appearances, among them George Blackwood, Francis Fuller, Vera Allen, Irene Cattel, Margaret Hamilton, Maidel Turner, Francis Lederer, Elizabeth Young, Frank Reicher, Edwin Phillips, James B. Wharton, Minor Watson, Howard Lally, Sid Silvers.

With the addition of several new independent companies and further completion of plans, release schedules for 1933-34 rapidly are lining up. Details of newest developments, which follow, are supplementary to new season's activities already reported in recent issues:

Amkino

Amkino, which distributes Russian films exclusively, will have an undetermined number of features, three two-reel color subjects and 12 one-reel industrials.

American Film

John F. Lyons heads this company, which has acquired from Pathe reissue rights to 21 features and an identical number of two-reel comedies, these in four series: Le Maire, Manhattan, Delmar and Varieties.

Auten Productions

Harold Auten has scheduled to date six one-reel shorts.

Beverly Hills Productions

Production started last week at Davidge Studios, Hollywood, on a revised schedule of 35 three-reelers, embracing 20 novelties and comedies and 15 travel and exploration reels.

Borden Pictures

Ramon Nazzaro will write and direct 12 two-reelers.

Columbia

Atlantic City has been tentatively set for the 1933-34 sales convention early in July.

The company's feature program is taking shape, with a group of stage plays and published fiction definitely set, including "20th Century," comedy by Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur; "Most Precious Thing in Life," published as "Biddy," by Travis Ingham; "Once to Every Woman," Cosmopolitan Magazine story, "Kaleidoscope in K," by A. J. Cronin; "The Mystery Guest," by Owen Davis; "Fog," Saturday Evening Post serial by Valentine Williams and Dorothy Rice Sims.

In addition, Frank Capra already is at work on Damon Runyon's "Lady for a Day"; Gilbert Miller is in England preparing "The Lady Is Willing," which probably will star Leslie Howard; Lewis Milestone and Laurence Stallings are enroute to Russia to make the first of a series of three, and negotiations are nearing consummation for acquisition of "Over the Seven Seas," made by William K. Vanderbilt.

Buck Jones and Tim McCoy probably will appear in 16 westerns, despite decisions of other companies to lessen the number of outdoor features.

Highlighting the shorts program will be a series of 12 two-reelers of historical and news events, "The March of the Years," produced by Mike Clofine of Hearst Metrotone News,

Independents Will Contribute Short Features to Practically All Large Companies as Double Bill Successor and Louis de Rochemont of Fox Movietone News. It is understood that there will be 12 two-reel comedies, 13 Screen Snapshots, 13 Scrappy Cartoons, 6 novelty shorts, continued release of old Mickey Mouse and Silly Symphonies, and probably about 40 two-reel comedies from Mack Sennett, who formerly produced for Paramount.

Criterion Pictures

Earl Bell listed six features and six two-reel animal shorts for 1933-34 release. Production in Hollywood.

Educational

Concentrating exclusively on shorts, this company finally has decided on a total of 118 subjects, of which 52 will be two-reelers, divided into eight series, and 66 one-reelers, split up into seven groups. The current season's group is 95 per cent finished. Details of the new material will be made known at the Fox convention in Atlantic City, opening June 29.

One important departure in sales policy to be announced will be the co-ordination hereafter of all Fox-Educational short subject sales activities. Heretofore, Fox's 26 Magic Carpet travel subjects were handled separately from Educational's shorts.

Embassy Pictures

Archie Mayers, sales manager, has lined up, for state rights release, 21 Harold Lloyd two-reel reissues, originally handled as silents by Pathe. They have been synchronized. In addition, there will be three three-reel subjects and 12 one-reel "Exotic Journeys."

Exploitation Pictures

Louis Weiss will supervise and produce four features. The first, now preparing, will be known as "Enlighten Thy Daughter." Leo Carrillo may appear in one or two of the remaining three. The company, organized two weeks ago, announced that each feature will be roadshown, with an exploitation crew.

Faith Pictures

David O'Malley, formerly with Powers Pictures, has turned over to Faith Pictures his first feature, titled "No Greater Faith," a subject of the Papacy.

First Division

Harry Thomas' company will have a minimum of 50 features. The company handles physical distribution for several companies, principally Monogram. When Budd Rogers, now sales manager, moves his headquarters from the exchange at 630 Ninth Avenue, to the home office at 1600 Broadway, the company will enlarge its offices.

Fox Film

The short subject schedule will continue to be 104 newsreel issues and 26 one-reel Movietone Magic Carpet travel subjects.

Fox's feature schedule will have its official start when "Pilgrimage" opens on Broadway, at the Gaiety, July 12.

Expanded activities abroad, under Robert T. Kane, probably will result in 12 features from the Paris unit. Directors will include Andre Daven and Eric Pommer, and present plans, although not definitely set, call for versions in English, French and German.

Sidney R. Kent, president, personally will outline the feature schedule at the convention at Atlantic City, beginning June 29.

Meanwhile, the studios at Movietone City are at work on the final group of six for the current season. These include "Shanghai Madness," "Life Worth Living," "The Last Trail," "Paddy, the Next Best Thing," "The Man Who Dared" and "The Devil's in Love."

RANKS OF INDEPENDENTS INCREASE

Futter (Wafilms)

Walter Futter concluded a deal last week with J. H. (Joe) Goldberg, former general sales manager of Columbia and of World Wide, whereby Mr. Goldberg will represent Wafilms in distribution, on a profit-sharing basis.

Currently, Futter is releasing "Curiosities," a series of shorts, through Columbia, and one feature, "India Speaks," through RKO. In 1933-34 he will produce at least four four-reel subjects, which will be designed to supplant the second feature on dual bills, or fill first short subject spots in single programs. The first, "Sandy," is finished. It is a story about a bear and a dog on a hunting trip in the Canadian Northwest. Second will be "Windjammer," dealing with the annual grain race from Australia to England. The next will deal with India and the fourth is undetermined. Futter will also continue producing "Curiosities."

Goldsmith Productions

"The Carnival Kid," for release September 10, will be the first of six features for the state right market.

Harman-Ising

This company will produce 18 animated musicals, featuring "Bosko" and "Honey," in a combination of one-reel Looney Tunes and Merry Melodies, which Vitaphone is distributing this season. Distribution for 1933-34 has not been set. Hugh Harman and Rudolf Ising operate.

Herrlitz

Charles Herrlitz, American representative of Bavaria-Film-Aktiengesellschaft, of Muenchen, Bavaria, has commenced preparations for distribution next season of the feature and short subject product of his company, which includes the Richard Tauber features, "The Golden Coal," "The Big Attraction," "Blonde Christel," and "I'll Never Believe Another Woman." Mr. Tauber is noted in Europe as an operatic and concert singer.

Ideal Pictures

Production has started on six three-reelers, designed to succeed the second feature on dual bills. First is "The First War," now ready. M. J. Kandel, president, also announced 26 one-reelers, to be called "What Nots."

Imperial

Imperial Distributing Corp. has scheduled two series of short subjects. Eighteen one-reelers, called "Port of Call," may be distributed by Monogram. Thirteen Edgar Guest one-reelers have not yet been set for release.

Jessel

George Jessel, sailing from New York for Los Angeles last Friday, said he intends to promote a producing company, with two features scheduled.

Jo-Jo Nites Producing Co.

Jack Rieger and Sam Efrus have formed this new company, to produce and distribute on the state rights market a series of 26 one-reel "Jo-Jo Nites" novelties. Charles Giegrich is in charge of sales. The first four have been completed. Arthur Hoerl is producing at Atlas Studio, New York.

Kinematrade

Tentatively set are 12 two and three-reelers, all Russian-made, some to have English dialogue dubbed.

Le Breton

Miss Flora Le Breton has finished the first of a series of shorts, all one-reel comedies, some with music; production at Fox Movietone studio in New York. Negotiations were said to be underway for release through a large company.

Lesser

Sol Lesser probably will produce a new series of Harold Bell Wright features.

Master Art

Sixty-four one-reel novelty shorts are on the new release schedule, according to E. Schwartz. Included will be 26 Organlogues, 6 Melody Makers, 6 featuring Edwin C. Hill and captioned "On the Human Side of the News," and 26 Grin-O-Grams.

Mentone

Two series of 26 single reel subjects will be produced, in addition to 13 two-reel subjects featuring radio and vaudeville headliners which will be made for Universal.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

Sales executives decided to hold two sales conventions instead of three regional meetings. The first will be at Detroit, June 25-26, the second in Kansas City, June 28 and 29. Home office executives, district and branch managers and bookers and salesmen from the field will attend.

It was decided last week to sell "Eskimo" and "Dinner At Eight" individually on the 1933-34 program. "Eskimo" is the first release.

Short subjects will include: 104 newsreel issues; 42 Roach comedies; 12 one-reel animal life novelties; eight two-reel detective dramas; six one-reel musical revues; 13 FitzPatrick Traveltalks; one cartoon group and several series of sport reels. Metro will produce the animal, detective and musical revue subjects.

Hal Roach returned to Hollywood from New York and Europe to begin work assembling the new lineup. Included in the 42 subjects he will make are six Laurel and Hardy two-reel comedies; eight Charley Chase comedies with music backgrounds; six "Our Gang" comedies; six musical comedies; eight two-reel comedies with Thelma Todd and Patsy Kelly, who succeeds Zasu Pitts; eight two-reel comedies with Doug Wakefield and Billy Nelson, English comedians signed while Mr. Roach was abroad.

Roach will also have two features starring Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy.

Monogram

Having already held a national sales convention in May, at Atlantic City, W. Ray Johnston has decided to hold a series of nationwide regional sales meetings.

The first meeting will be in New York, July 8-9, attended by managers, salesmen and bookers from New York, Philadelphia, Albany, Boston, Buffalo, Cleveland, Washington Pittsburgh and Cincinnati. A Chicago meeting, July 13 and 14, will have representation from Chicago, Indianapolis, Minneapolis, St. Louis, Detroit, Kansas City, Omaha and Milwaukee.

A meeting in New Orleans, July 20-21, will embrace New Orleans, Atlanta, Charlotte, Tampa, Little Rock, Oklahoma City and Dallas. The San Francisco sessions, July 28 and 29, will be for San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, Denver and Portland. The last meeting, August 2 and 3, will be at Toronto for the entire Canadian contingent.

Eddie Golden, sales manager, will preside at all meetings, the purpose of which, he said, is to set the complete sales policy in line with decentralization, coordinating merchandising and sales for the 37 branches.

At the time the first meeting is held, Monogram will have four features in work: "The Avenger," starring Ralph Forbes; "The Sweetheart of Sigma Chi"; "Skyways," and one other.

Negotiations are nearing consummation for the appearance of John Wayne in eight westerns.

National Pictures

Hal Byrnes is to be featured in six cowboy song subjects, all shorts, directed by Josh Binney.

Paramount

With seven productions in work on the Paramount coast sound stages, the middle of June finds five other units ready, eight more stories in preparation, and three features in the cutting room, a total of 23 pictures in various stages.

The company announced last week that Charles R. Rogers will produce ten features, instead of eight. Again Paramount will finance and make all its players available.

George J. Schaefer, general manager, announced Monday he has appointed Neil Agnew assistant general sales manager. He will also continue to function as head of the western sales division.

Short subject plans have been completed, including 236 subjects, as follows: 107 one-reelers, 24 two-reelers, 104 issues of Paramount News. The single reels will include 18 Betty Boop cartoons; 18 Screen Songs; 13 Screen Souvenirs; 13 Hollywood on Parade subjects; 13 Grantland Rice Sportlights; 13 Paramount Headliners, and 13 Paramount Pictorials.

The two-reelers will embrace 6 comedies starring Harry Langdon, which Arvid Gillstrom will produce; 6 comedies featuring Eugene Pallette and Walter Catlett, which Phil L. Ryan will make, and 6 assorted comedies, to be directed by Del Lord.

Bing Crosby will star in 6 one-minute musicals.

Meanwhile, Adolph Zukor arrived in Hollywood this week from New York to keep a "fatherly eye" on production, which is in charge of Emanuel Cohen.

Pollak

Adolph Pollak is understood to have concluded releasing arrangements to handle 24 features, which Aubrey M. Kennedy is to produce at the new studios at St. Petersburg. Buster Keaton arrived in Florida last week to star in at least six pictures.

Pollard

Bud Pollard's new company will produce 12 features. The first, "Victims of Persecution," is ready for release, and the second, "The Horror," will be ready July 1. Others will be "Strange Women of the World," released July 15; "Kings of Laughter," August 1; "Dance Hall Dames," September 1; "Framed," October 1, and "Manhattan Madness," "Green Jade" and "Chinatown Nights."

Principal

The company has acquired for distribution a three-reeler, "Hula," about Hawaii, which Phil Brown produced.

Progressive

Willis Kent and Ralph M. Like are in control of this new company, which, they say, will produce and distribute 16 features. Albert K. Goodman is handling exploitation and publicity out of New York. The first will be "Her Splendid Folly," now in work. Others will be: "Jail Bait"; "Passionate Pasha," a musical; "Torture Ship"; "Ladies' Entrance"; "Crooner's Bride"; "His Brothers Wife"; "Hell's Crossroads"; "Museum Murder"; "Yellow Fangs"; "Morals in Pawn"; "Woman Condemned"; "Legal Loot" and "Love Hijacker." Production at Like's studio in Hollywood.

Radio-Keith-Orpheum

George White was negotiating with Radio to produce a series of features.

Short subject plans are practically set, and bankruptcy for Publix-Ohio and Mr. Blank was elected trustee for the Nebraska circuits.

Charles D. Hilles, Louis J. Horowitz and Eugene W. Leake were elected trustees of Paramount Publix, but three weeks later Mr. Horowitz resigned. Charles E. Richardson, former Fox treasurer, was appointed to the vacant trusteeship. Along toward the middle of April it was reported that Publix and subsidiaries in six weeks had returned 40 houses to their original owners. During all this time Irving Trust continued to dissolve theatre divisions, returning numerous properties to former owners. M. A. Shea regained theatres in Westfield, Mass., and Fremont, Ohio. Foreclosure proceedings were instituted against Mountain States, bankrupt Publix subsidiary, in Denver by Harry Nolan, for the return of the Mesa at Grand Junction and the Rex in Greeley. Mountain States returned the America, Colorado Springs, to Tommy Tompkins. Up to May 13, Mr. Topliff had been making his headquarters in the Publix offices trying to effect general reorganization of Publix Enterprises and its 76 subsidiary companies, totaling approximately 350 theatres. Many of these were in the process of being turned back to their original owners. Five Publix houses in Boston were returned to George A. Giles. Pittsburgh headquarters of the Publix-Skouras Theatres had been closed.

Lynch Heads Committee

Then the trustees maintained a strict silence regarding disposition of Publix theatres until May 27, when it was announced that S. A. Lynch, one time theatre ruler of the South as head of Southern Enterprises, Inc., was returning to active participation in exhibition as chairman of the committee formed to reorganize completely the Paramount Publix circuit. Mr. Lynch had left Paramount at the time when Southern Enterprises, Inc., was sold to Paramount which, at about the same time, purchased Black's New England Theatres, Inc., and used both groups as the foundation for what later became the Publix circuit.

With its one-time control split a hundred ways by receiverships, bankruptcies and reversion of many of its theatres to former owners, Paramount Publix announced on May 29 that it had no intention of relinquishing its hold as an exhibitor on a far-flung national scale. While the company entertained no ideas of withdrawing from exhibition, the circuit is bound to emerge with far fewer than the 1,200 houses embraced in the Publix circuit at the peak. The plan calls for partnerships throughout the nation, complete decentralization with operation vested in partners or local representative and a general unwinding of the financial structures under which the Publix circuit originally was developed.

As a result of a recommendation made last week by Irving Trust, Publix Enterprises will terminate all real estate operations. The recommendation was approved by Referee Henry K. Davis.

Disposition of the Publix-Salt Lake circuit had been held up when creditors, led by S. A. Lynch, obtained a 10-day postponement of action on three offers for the circuit which had been received by Irving Trust. Offers had been received from Louis Marcus, Oscar Oldknow, and Harry Davis, and on June 8 a new bid came from Mr. Marcus for Publix Enterprises' 50 per cent interest in the Salt Lake circuit and was accepted by Publix Enterprises at a creditors' meeting before Referee Henry K. Davis. Included in the bid was an option whereby Public Enterprises may repurchase the 50 per cent interest for $50,000.

THE FOX SITUATION

In January, 1932, the Skouras brothers took over the operation and management of approximately 550 Fox theatres, located in the North, along the Pacific Coast, in the Midwest and in upstate New York. Skouras acquired 47 theatres in the New York territory and obtained a small block of Publix theatres in the East on an operating agreement in the early fall of 1931, following the sudden resignation of Spyros Skouras as chief of the Warner circuit. In the deal with Fox, Skouras obtained Fox West Coast, a circuit of about 500 theatres in Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Mexico, Nevada, Oregon, Washington, Wisconsin and Wyoming, these houses being operated in three divisions: Midwesco, Midwest-Midland Theatres and West Coast. At the same time Skouras took over the upstate Schine division of Fox theatres in New York. Subsidiary corporations of these divisions were numerous, but of the 600 or more theatres comprising the Fox circuit at its peak, Skouras had almost complete control.

Decentralizing Begins January 28

January 28, 1933, marked the actual beginning of the breaking down of the various Fox Theatre Corp. subsidiaries. Decentralization of Fox theatres in the Middlewest was ordered. Long-range supervision had proved unsuccessful. Six Topeka houses were returned to separate operation under Elmer C. Rhoden, Midwest division manager, and it was understood at that time that Rhoden's former Midwest circuit would be revived as a unit separate from Fox operation. Fox houses in Wichita also were reported to be reverting to Rhoden in a division similar to the Topeka deal. In February, Fox theatres, operated by Skouras, were broken down into five operating divisions, as follows:

George Skouras, in New York, handling 83 houses in Greater New York and upstate New York; Elmer Rhoden, 130 houses; Oscar Brachman, Tom and J. E. Saxe, in Milwaukee, 51 in Wisconsin; Frank L. Newman, Sr., Al and Mike Rosenberg, in Seattle, 28 theatres; Charles Skouras, Los Angeles, 160 on Coast.

Late in February a petition was filed in Boston against Fox Theatres Corp. stating that on June 22, 1932, in federal district court, New York, William E. Atkinson and John F. Sherman were reported receivers for the company at the request of the Chicago Title and Trust Company, and that since attachments were being made against Fox interests in Boston it was essential that receivers be appointed to preserve those interests. At Hartford, Conn., March 1, permission was granted the New York Trust Company and Boyd G. Curts to foreclose on properties owned by Fox New England Theatres in Connecticut. The New York Trust and Mr. Curtis were trustees for the bondholders.

On Monday, February 27, Charles P. Skouras and John Treanor were appointed co-receivers for Fox West Coast Theatres Corp. Seventy-five per cent of all creditors were represented at a meeting of the directorate the previous Saturday, these creditors representing $13,000,000 which which was owed to Wesco Corp., a Delaware company, and $2,000,000 which was owing to Fox Film Corp., New York.

42 Theatres Affected

The receivership directly affected approximately 42 theatres in California, Arizona, Oregon and Washington. Several houses were closed. Charles Skouras said the action was forced by high rentals, the existence of large purchase contracts and the wholesale reduction of admission prices.

Later, word came from Seattle that Fox-Columbia Corp. of Delaware had announced purchase of the assets of Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc., for $425,000, or 77 per cent of the appraised value. Al and Mike Rosenberg were placed in charge of the venture which involved 28 Pacific Northwest theatres in Idaho, Washington and Oregon. The circuit had been in receivership for some time.

During the week ending March 4, Harry Asher, lessor of 20 of the Fox New England Theatres, relinquished the group to the receivers of Fox New England Theatres, Inc.

With a petition in bankruptcy filed early in March in Milwaukee by Midwesco Theatres, Inc., the film industry saw the biggest bankruptcy action ever instituted in eastern Wisconsin. The Midwesco group, embracing 51 houses, previously had been turned back to the Saxe interests by Fox. Liabilities were listed at $1,535,167 and assets were given as $310,173. Unsecured claims totaled $1,436,280 and $3,052 in admission taxes was owed. Actually, only about 14 of the 51 theatres were affected by the action, as the three companies which had been organized by the Saxe interests took back the houses they formerly controlled. The three companies were Saxe Management, Inc., Statewide Theatres Corp. and Wisconsin Amusement Enterprises Corp. The Saxe brothers immediately made plans for decentralization of the former 51 Midwesco houses and were expected ultimately to retain only the houses they wanted.

Return of Houses Undertaken

On the heels of its voluntary bankruptcy, Fox West Coast launched a general move to return many theatres to their original owners and this move was speedily carried out. The company abandoned publicity and advertising departments at its home offices and what was left was transferred to Kansas City. At the same time reorganization of Fox Midwest administration departments got under way. Fox Midwest was clear of either receivership or bankruptcy actions of Fox West Coast because it was operating under a new holding company previously organized and was not a subsidiary of the FWC circuit.

Additional Fox theatres were placed in receivership along toward the middle of March when voluntary petitions were granted at Kansas City for Fox Rocky Mountain and Fox Midland companies. Herbert V. Jones was appointed temporary receiver for both companies. The combined action, which was said to have been caused by burdensome overhead and drastic admission reductions, followed local conferences with Spyros Skouras, Elmer C. Rhoden and other Fox executives in the territory. Assets were listed at $12,000,000 and liabilities at $9,000,000.

RKO REDUCES THEATRE HOLDINGS

Through April progress was made toward settlement of the various receivership activities of Fox theatre subsidiaries. Reorganization of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses was well under way and the receivers reported that the newly formed circuit would have from 100 to 125 houses. Ten houses were dropped in the Denver territory and four in Wisconsin reverted to former owners. Nine Fox West Coast theatres were returned to United Artists.

Early in May Schine brothers resumed operation of 25 upstate New York houses, thus marking further decentralization of Fox Metropolitan. In Kansas City Herbert M. Woolf and M. B. Shanberg, who sold the Fox and Midland circuit in 1929, filed a motion in federal court asking that the voluntary petition in bankruptcy be set aside and the receiver discharged on the grounds that indebtedness on which the receivership was based was false and fictitious. At this writing the suit is still going on. Five houses formerly operated by Midwesco were reopened by independent exhibitors during the first week in May. On May 16 Fox Film Corp., Wesco Corp. and Fox Wisconsin filed an involuntary petition against Statewide Theatres, Inc., in Wilmington, Del. A previous suit had been filed in Wisconsin on May 22 and a receiver appointed.

On June 1 it was announced that Fox West Coast had dropped 30 of the 40 houses which were in direct bankruptcy.

RADIO-KEITH-ORPHEUM

In April, 1932, Harold B. Franklin took over the management of RKO theatres, announcing that all operations would be on an individual basis with a maximum amount of freedom granted to division managers. Mr. Franklin at that time attributed most of the ills of the theatre to overseating and weakness of manpower. The solution of the first, he said, depended upon the willingness of large circuits to join in a cooperative move designed to reduce overseating, and the second required every executive and subordinate to prove his worth.

"It is idle to maintain," said Mr. Franklin, "that the efficiency of the motion picture industry increased anything like the proportion in which theatres have been acquired. Right up to the eve of the depression, circuits over-built, investing in brick, stone and mortar, instead of brains, in a desire to dominate the industry. Those motion picture organizations that laid more stress on the character of their manpower, rather than on physical assets, have fared much better. Those who built more modestly and expanded more soundly are finding in present conditions greater opportunities for the future. Division managers of our circuits will operate almost as if they were the owners of the houses in their charge."

Petitions Filed January 24

On January 24, 1933, four minority security holders of Radio-Keith-Orpheum filed petitions for receivership for the corporation in three separate suits. Each of the suits was in connection with sums allegedly due the various plaintiffs on gold notes issued by the corporation. The suits were filed in New York, Newark, N. J., and Baltimore. In Newark, temporary receivers were appointed.

The corporation consented to the appointment of a receiver in New York, and the following statement was issued: "The company is unable to obtain cash necessary to provide for its presently maturing obligations and for other necessary requirements during the year, and the directors have reluctantly reached the conclusion that a continuance of operation without a substantial overhauling of the burdensome rental and fixed charge requirements of certain of the company's theatre-owning subsidiaries and extension of presently maturing debts of the company could serve no useful purpose, but would merely serve to diminish further the company's assets without benefit to any one interested in the company. Negotiations are under way with landlords and mortgagees for readjustment of rentals and fixed charge requirements to a basis consistent with present business levels, and we are sure that through such readjustments the business can ultimately be placed on a sound and profitable basis."

RKO AND ORPHEUM

Operator buying film: 68 houses. Turned back to landlords or new owners: 34 theatres.

Only Theatre Units Affected

Subsidiaries of RKO are B. F. Keith Corp., Greater New York Vaudeville Theatres Corp., the former B. F. Keith-Albee Exchange, Orpheum Circuit, Inc., F. F. Proctor Theatres, RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., RKO Studios, Inc., RKO Distributing Corp., Pathe News and the two Radio City theatres. It was made clear that receivership affected only the theatre corporations.

The petition filed in New York was brought by Alfred West, holder of $5,000 of the corporation's 6 per cent gold notes. The petition declared, among other things, that while the corporation was solvent, it lacked liquid assets with which to meet future obligations. The petition charged that operations of RKO and its subsidiaries were profitable through 1930, but that in 1931 the net result was a loss of $5,660,770, and that during the first nine months of 1932 the corporation lost $4,964,331. The Orpheum Circuit, Inc., a $23,000,000 operating company controlled by Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corp., had theatres in 27 cities in California, Colorado, Illinois, Iowa, Louisiana, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Oregon, Tennessee, Wisconsin, Washington, and in Alberta and Manitoba, Canada. The Orpheum Circuit was understood to have been operating at losses approximating $30,000 weekly. The various receiverships of RKO theatre subsidiaries involved approximately 65 houses, about one-half of the nationwide circuit.

Irving Trust Permanent Receiver

Coincident with the Orpheum petition, similar petitions were filed in federal court in Delaware on behalf of RKO Western Corp. and RKO Southern Corp., both theatre units of the parent company. These petitions, signed by Mr. Franklin, who likewise signed the Orpheum bill, stated the corporations owed debts but were unable to pay them in full. The Southern Corporation was formed by RKO to operate houses acquired from Karl Hoblitzelle in Houston, Dallas, Fort Worth and San Antonio. The Western Corporation operated houses taken from Alexander Pantages on the Pacific Coast. Although Nat Holt, RKO's division manager in the Midwest, declared that properties supervised by him were solvent and would continue to function and meet obligations, auxiliary co-receivers were appointed for RKO Midwest. Receivers were appointed for RKO properties in Maryland and for RKO's Toledo houses.

Late in February, Irving Trust was appointed permanent receiver in equity for Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corp. The theatre situation continued with RKO giving up its lease on the Mayfair in New York and with a general rearrangement of the RKO New York division. H. R. Emde, an RKO district manager, took over all New York city houses from 125th Street north, with the exception of the 58th Street, which he retained. Charles B. McDonald took over operations from 125th Street south, including Brooklyn. Three houses were given up in St. Louis.

During the week ending March 4, a voluntary petition in bankruptcy was filed by RKO Theatre Operating Corp., in New York federal court. The chief creditors were Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corp. and Fox Metropolitan Playhouses. Two new leases on the Radio City theatres were approved by the court. They expire August 1. Meanwhile in Wilmington schedules were filed for RKO Southern and RKO Western in federal court. RKO Southern listed assets at $480,243 and liabilities at $789,235. RKO Western listed assets of $6,530,-314 and liabilities at $4,606,494. In the RKO receivership actions, ancillary receivers were appointed for RKO Theatre Operating Corp.

Between the end of March and April, there were few developments other than one or two voluntary petitions in bankruptcy of individual theatres. The company, between March and the end of May, engaged in silent but thorough decentralization of non-paying houses until, at the end of May, decentralization was completed and the company was operating a total of 101 houses. Great care was taken in the selection of houses to be dropped and, according to Mr. Franklin, only 28 had been dropped since the company went into receivership, January 27, at which time it was operating 129 theatres.

Chase Bank Writes Off $55,700,000 of Fox Losses

The Chase National Bank has written off $55,700,000 of its losses in connection with Fox Film and General Theatres Equipment Corporation financing. This has been accomplished through reduction of capital and the surplus profits account.

It is understood the bank is now working on the refinancing program for Fox and temporarily has waived interest on $30,000,000 of the company's debentures.

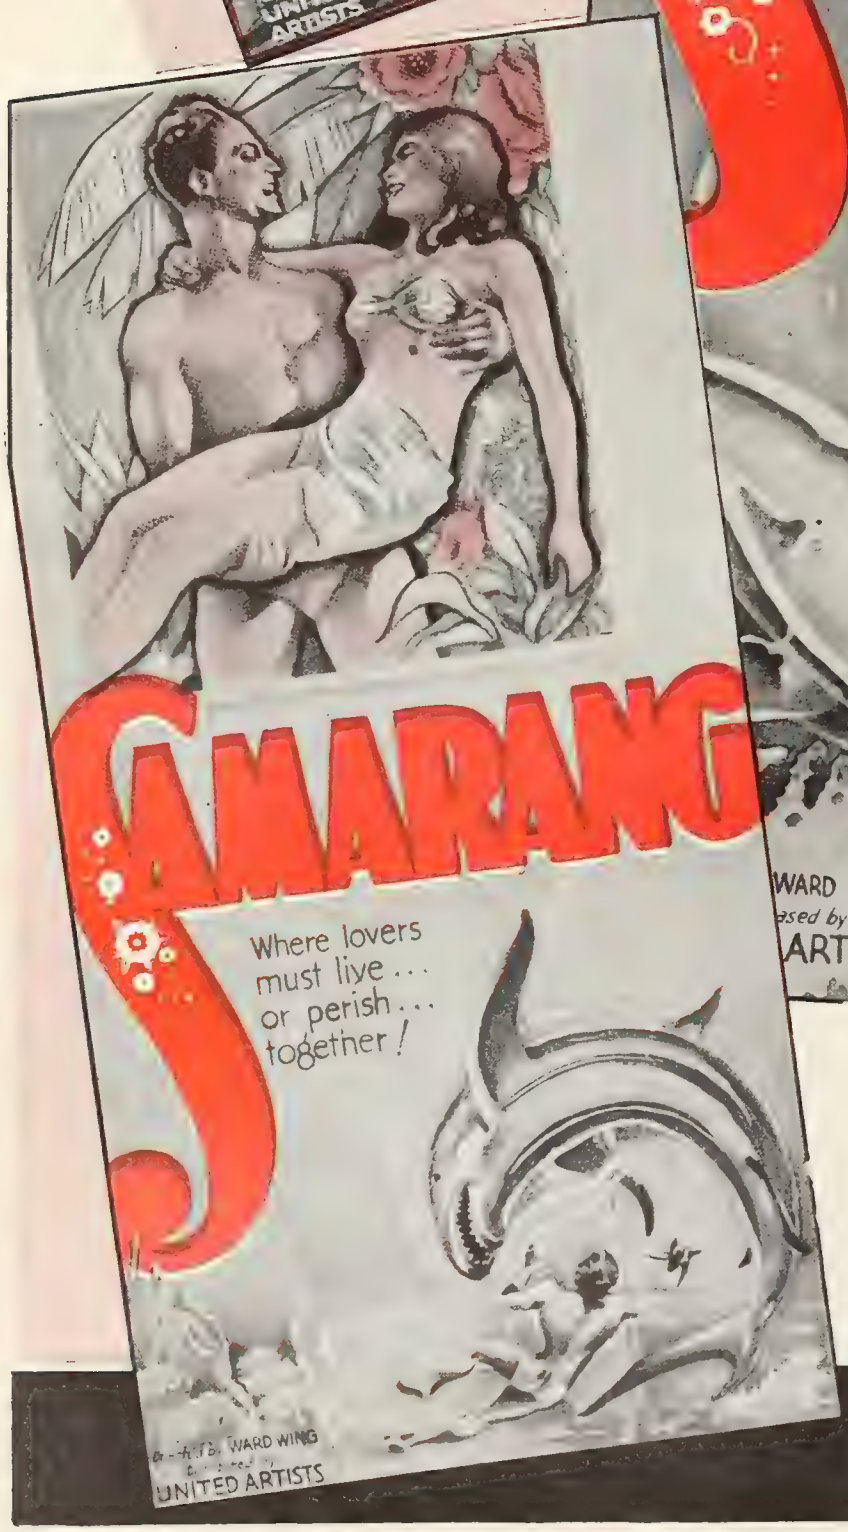
Nine Florida Houses Bankrupt

Bankruptcy petitions have been filed in the United States district court at Tampa, Fla., by four theatre corporations. Each corporation, operating one or more houses, is part of the Sparks circuit of Florida, with headquarters at Lakeland. Nine theatres in six towns are affected by the action, which was to be taken up Thursday by Referee William N. Ellis.

Warner, Shea in Pooling Deal

Joseph Bernhard of Warner, and Mort A. Shea have completed pooling of the three first run houses in Youngstown, Ohio. Included are the Park, Warner and Paramount, with operations and bookings to be handled by both parties jointly in New York.

Southern Theatre Owner Dead



Fred L. Marshall, president of the Marshan Theatres Company, Tupelo, Mass., and operator of the Strand there, died suddenly recently of a heart attack.

New Mexico's Sales Law Held Unconstitutional

A permanent injunction restraining the state of New Mexico from enforcing a law enacted by the last legislative session to control the motion picture industry's sales was issued in Santa Fe federal court this week by three judges, Orie L. Phillips of Denver, T. Blake Kennedy of Cheyenne, and District Judge Neblet of Santa Fe. These three also presided at a hearing on April 7, when a temporary injunction was granted to MGM.

The law would have made available to independent theatres all pictures produced on an equal basis with theatres owned or controlled by producers and distributors. It also would have made misrepresentation punishable by fine and jail sentence, and would have given the state corporation commissioner power to fix "fair prices" for pictures and impose other restrictions.

Attacked as violating the copyright laws, the court upheld the contention that it also attempted to regulate a private business, and interfered with interstate commerce.

Ohio MPTO Thanked for Aid to Conservation Corps

An expression of gratitude, in the form of a letter, was received recently by P. J. Wood, business manager of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio, at Columbus, from Major Newton N. Polk, Ohio National Guard, who thanked Mr. Wood, representing local theatre owners, for opening their theatres on two days in May to men enrolled in the Civilian Conservation Corps.

The letter said in part: "It is such action on the part of such representative citizens that simplify the difficult problems connected with this and similar undertakings. . . . The assembly and initial movement of such units involved many questions, not the least of which was recreational, and this was solved very successfully by the generosity of the owners of these theatres."

The chief object of his visit, however, is to attempt further expansion of the company's distributing activities in this country. He will also view such American product as is available for distribution in England.

Mr. Ostrer said that Gaumont-British is continuing its production schedule without delay and that the company has been operating profitably throughout the depression that has so affected the American industry.

Decision Due Soon on St. Louis Receivership

A decision is expected shortly from Circuit Judge Henry Hamilton in St. Louis, either making permanent or terminating the temporary receivership of the St. Louis Amusement Company. Roy B. Britton and Henri Chouteau have been acting as receivers for the circuit since November 24, 1931.

Warner and Skouras Brothers Enterprises, Inc., owners of approximately 90 per cent of the Amusement Company stock, have opposed the receivership as unnecessary. Receivers' reports indicate the theatres have been making money under their management.

"SHALLOW SHADOW OF THE STAGE"

Resolved: That the Legitimate Drama Has Lost Its Popularity
Affirmative: Mr. Jack Cohn
Negative: Mr. Brock Pemberton
Judge: Dr. Frederick Robinson

Characterizing the motion picture in its talking form as a cold, colorless mechanism, lacking "spiritual glow," the eyrie bower for "empty ghosts booming from a void," Mr. Brock Pemberton, noted playwright and pioneer producer of the stage, undertook in a debate last week to defend the popularity of the legitimate theatre against the mass appeal of the cinema. Mr. Jack Cohn, vice-president of Columbia Pictures Corporation, was Mr. Pemberton's staunch opponent, and while Mr. Cohn's presentation of the argument was not nearly so fiery as Mr. Pemberton's, the mute but quite tangible evidence of the existence today of some 12,000 motion picture houses, as against a few dozens in the legitimate field provided irrefutable support for Mr. Cohn's argument.

The facilities of the radio, which in itself presents a serious form of competition both to stage and screen, were employed to bring the debate to the public over Station WMCA. The subject, first discussed even before the day the motion picture was given voice, was analyzed possibly more deeply by last week's logicians, but while the eminent judge, Dr. Frederick Robinson, said "draw," the public still has the final say.

Mr. Cohn's arguments were presented for him by Mr. Ben Atwell. "The great gift of the motion picture was the elimination of time and space," he said.

Dr. Robinson is president of City College of New York. Mr. Cohn's career in the motion picture industry, in which he pioneered, is well known. Mr. Pemberton, still under 50, trained for the theatre while on a reporter's travels for the Kansas press. Later he wrote about the stage regularly for the old New York World, and then the Times. One of his best known contributions to the stage was his production of Preston Sturges' "Strictly Dishonorable." Mr. Atwell was the first press agent for the Capitol theatre on Broadway.

THE MOTION PICTURE— by JACK COHN

Universality of appeal undoubtedly is the foremost of many advantages enjoyed by the motion picture over the legitimate theatre. The picture affords the most direct medium of transferring thought. We know that its use antedated writing.

Stories are and always have been the foundation of public entertainment. The professional story-teller of the long ago was the prototype of the modern historian, the novelist and the playwright.

When drama came into being, it was a pictorial form of narration. Living models were used to express and to visualize the intents of the authors. Time has worked no important change in this—the actor remains an interpreter and an instrument through which the author's purposes are envisioned. Such being the case, the motion picture enjoys every conceivable advantage over the socalled legitimate stage.

Limitations Swept Away

First: Because the limitations of the structural theatre and of the stage itself are swept away. They formed a physical frame in which the picture or series of pictures in the author's mind were sketched and exhibited.

I cannot escape the conviction that the demonstrated popularity of the motion picture is a natural development of progress just as the evolution of the modern theatre from its elemental Greek prototype was a natural development of progress. Numerous elements are factors.

First, of course, comes the universality of appeal, for this is the secret of its economic advantages. Obviously a multitude can be simultaneously entertained at a less cost per capita than a select few. A similar illustration is found in mass production in manufacture.

The motion picture provides mass entertainment at a minimum cost. New York and the smallest western hamlet, Vienna and Tokio, Capetown, Africa, Montevideo, in South America, and Adelaide, Australia, and all intervening points, may enjoy the same entertainment at the same time. The picture speaks in all languages.

Quality a Parallel Factor

Quality, quite naturally, goes hand in hand with such a condition. No writer, no actor, no directorial genius is beyond the financial possibilities of the picture producer, as contrasted with the sharply drawn limitations of the legitimate theatre. The latter has existed throughout the centuries, and, of course, will continue. It is highly desirable from every standpoint that it should. But the legitimate theatre slowly and surely is becoming the recreation center of a select group, instead of the general public. This select group also finds entertainment in the motion picture theatre.

Perhaps the greatest advantage favoring the motion picture lies in the fact that it makes possible an almost literal transcription of a writer's work, whether novel or play, reflecting the ever changing mood in all its nuances. As a medium it is the most flexible instrument for narration developed throughout all time.

It would ill become me, as spokesman for the younger sister of the legitimate stage, to criticize the latter's shortcomings. Frankly, no criticism is intended, yet there are many conditions in the conduct of the legitimate theatre and motion picture theatres differing so greatly in approach as to constitute strong contrasts of viewpoint. Of course, "the play's the thing," but not the only thing.

One becomes accustomed to hearing complaint of unhappy experiences with the box-office personnel at the legitimate theatre and of discourtesy at the hands of ushers and other attaches. Such a thing is unknown in the motion picture theatres of the land. These theatres are new and modern. The only criticism I ever have heard directed against them has been based upon over-decoration.

Stage Trend to Sophistication

In contrast, the legitimate theatre has taken a decided trend towards sophistication. This has eliminated almost all socalled "ginger-bread" decoration. In consequence the legitimate theatre in its physical aspects differs little from any commercial institution in its drab bareness.

The superiority of the motion picture theatre over the legitimate theatre in this respect is duplicated in all its physical appointments.

Nor is the educational value of the motion picture to be overlooked. A discussion of the almost unlimited possibilities in the field of visual education has no place here, yet I cannot avoid reference to the fact that the average motion picture program has a very decided educational value.

But, after all, entertainment is the primary purpose of the theatre, whether devoted to legitimate presentations or film. The vastly greater number of persons attending the latter in every city in the land affords a verdict that cannot be upset by anything we may say on the subject. Public choice is proven by public patronage, and we all know where the public is bestowing that patronage.

THE STAGE— by BROCK PEMBERTON

I understand this is the hour this station regularly devotes to prizefights. I congratulate the program maker on his sense of the fitness of things. He picked the right audience. If I hit low or in the clinches, if in the heat of battle I bite, scratch or pull hair, I ask the Honorable Referee to give me the chimes.

I'm asked to discuss the relative popularity of stage and screen because, it seems, the first 10 persons on Broadway to whom Announcer Alexander offered a choice of play or movie tickets chose the latter. I'm afraid they've again paged the wrong party for a cool, rational, unbiased, unprejudiced analysis and I'll tell you why. I'm a sort of specialist. Before you stands the world's first movie critic. In 1915, when John Cohen was rattling 'round the streets of Atlanta in his perambulator, when none of his brother reporters suspected Freddie Hall's middle name was Mordaunt, I appointed myself movie critic of the New York Times. Those were the days of silent pictures, days when mothers named their sons David Wark instead of Franklin D., when Doug Fairbanks, the first, was the world's champion high jumper, when movie actresses wore dresses. Every Sunday for a year, and $12 a column, I sentenced myself to viewing two or three movie gems. My nearest approach to fame was to be commanded to appear before Roxy in his Rialto suite to debate the advisability of dwelling upon his orchestra's rendition of the "Tannhäuser" overture rather than the shortcomings of the current photoplay.

Contracts "Cinemarabies"

Fifty-two Sundays and I abdicated my self-appointed job as suddenly as I had assumed it, a victim of a dread disease, cinemarabies.

Eighteen years after, I still flinch when passing Motion Picture Cathedrals and Cinema Synagogues. I keep telling myself that talkies are different, that being an imitation of plays they are in fact a subtle compliment to the stage, that the best of them are good entertainment. This calms me and frequently I go in to be insulted and misinformed as to vacant seats by slick young Adonises, to have my feet tramped on in the democracy of unreserved chairs, but nevertheless to have a pretty good evening.

This little prologue gives you a rough idea

College Humor

(Paramount)

Comedy

Good showmanship, administered in large and hectic doses, will be absolutely necessary if this widely heralded gay and giddy collegiate comedy is to measure up at the box office. Frankly, many critics and lots of patrons may be of the opinion that it falls short of advance expectations. Paradoxically, it contains plenty of the old standby elements that will permit smart showmen to sell it to their patrons in such a way that they will be convinced that they are going to see a pretty good show.

Here's the way we look at "College Humor." It's a comedy of youth—of college capers, fraternity frivolities and campus cavortings; of Harold Teens and Betty Co-Eds; of all the fun and frolic and some of the drama that goes with the popular conception of college life and this kind of an attraction. There's music in it—tuneful and rhythmic—and dancing, but it's hardly a musical and one should resist any temptation to classify it with some of the current musicals like "42nd Street," "Gold Diggers" or "Melody Cruise." There's romance and love interest. There's excitement and thrills, and, if you please, the traditional football classic, won in the last second, that's always good for public interest. But above all, there is hokum comedy, gobs of it, in dialogue, action and situations, that under the proper stimulation, letting the gang know what to expect, should generate plenty of laughter. Undoubtedly that's what the show was made for—to make people laugh. It's the direct tip-off on what to sell.

Instead of a summary, here are some of the things that are in the story. Oakie blows into Midwest U. as a freshman. Arlen is the All-American line-wrecker. Crosby is a crooning prof. His "Learn To Croon" method of instruction, done in the typical Crosby style, following the "Old Ox Road" song dance number, won the preview crowd. Burns and Allen have only a brief specialty appearance. Then are traced a couple of years of college cartooning, frat initiations, the old college spirit with Arlen rivaling Crosby for the affections of the campus siren, Mary Carlisle, and Oakie in love with Mary Kornmann. Arlen is fired out of college for breaking training on the eve of a crucial football game, preceded by the miracle of the crooning Crosby kayoing the husky All-American. Then we go on to the climatic football classic where a sub-rosa U. S. C. eleven scores a thrilling one-point last minute victory over an equally sub-rosa Notre Dame team, with Oakie making use of a famous Arlen play to put across the win.

All of it is hectic; almost always it is lively, but sometimes it's draggy and out of step with the predominant tempo. Yet it's novelly entertaining, more than enough to inspire an interest-alluring campaign. The title is a nifty, and this, backed up by the if-it's-fun-you-want atmosphere of the show, can be made the basis for all sorts of slick advertising copy. Cartoon art of the principals should be accompanied by lines suggesting youth, love and laughter; school days, college days, happy days; sports, thrills, sweethearts, nights in the moonlight; tune-slinging comedy.

Use everything that goes with a college picture in circus style. Decorate your front and lobby with flags, high-school and college pennants. Drag out the old smart-crack covered flivvers, fraternity and club performances. Contact for window displays featuring sports and college togs. Hookup with any sporting events, tennis, golf, baseball.

The title is ideal for newspaper tieups as the heading for a special column in which old grads can reminisce. Prizes for the funniest stories. Don't overlook the fact that a lot of people will want to get a closeup look at the famous Howard Jones. He has a heavy bit in the picture that is worth a plug on the sport pages.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Midnight Mary

(MGM)

Dramatic Romance

Relating a familiar plot in a novel way, "Midnight Mary," previewed as "Lady of the Night," is a dramatic romance of regular program caliber. The story is told in retrospect and details the dramatic events in the life of a girl on trial for murder. Continually fringing on a gangster atmosphere, which makes for stark drama, the romantic element is introduced in the love story of a blue-blooded young lawyer and the lady. Contrasting comedy is provided by the chum of the girl and the pal of the boy. Being strictly modern, the show's appeal should be directed at the everyday class of theatre-goers, with particular effort made to capture the interest of the adults and saying nothing about the children. The dramatic action is sufficient to capture the interest of the men folk, and stressing the romance of the girl in a manner that tends to create audience sympathy for the innocent victim of a series of serio-tragic events, should be the angle to pursue in intriguing feminine curiosity.

As Mary sits in the court clerk's office awaiting the jury's verdict, the dated annual reports suggest incidents that brought her into her present predicament, a murderess. Thus the audience sees a review of the 'tingling twenties' starting when Mary and Bunny, a pair of push-overs, are picked up by Leo, a big shot gangster. Then comes a period of glamorous easy living with Mary as Leo's sweetie, until in a gambling club a murder is committed and Mary is thrown into the arms of Tom. Mary puts her old life behind and goes to work in Tom's office.

Another year and the cop recognizes her as a member of Leo's mob. Rather than permit Tom to know the real story of her career, she dramatically breaks off the romance. Back with Leo, things progress to a point where the only way out for Mary is to kill. She does and then comes the trial. The district attorney has lined up damning evidence. After the clerk's office interlude, Mary is brought back to hear the verdict of guilty. The young lawyer, Tom, rushes in, and on the grounds of new evidence, demands a new trial, which, of course, shows self-defense, and brings Mary's freedom.

In both straight advertising and exploitation there is ample opportunity to conduct interest-creating campaigns. The cast offers a number of well-known names for marquee and lobby card purposes. Dialogue lines can be made the basis of unusual ad copy, while the dated record gag can be adapted in many ways.

If you have not done so recently, it might be a good idea to create a campaign that will place the audience in the position of being the jury. They will see all the incidents, know all the evidence and extenuating circumstances. Make your advertising ring with the question whether, though guilty in the eyes of the law, there is guilt in the eyes of society. In other words, does a person who kills a rat, to protect herself and the man she really loves, do the world a favor?

The action related to the major drama of the show precludes exploitation as children's entertainment. Stimulated by a strong campaign, it has the possibilities of attracting better than average business from the adults.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Goodbye Again

(Warner Bros.)

Comedy

Here's one of the smartest, silliest comedies that ever turned a preview audience into a gale of mirth. Starting slowly, its first five minutes create an ideal ambush for the following hour, when it explodes like a bunch of firecrackers, followed by risque, blush-provoking dialogue and action vying with a brand new idea in story treatment and character interpretation. It's one of those things that, despite perfect timing, is going to find the audience missing subsequent farcical lines as the glee drowns out the dialogue.

Despite its nutty comedy, the picture may be a bit too vivid for the long hairs; but for the moderns, all the way from the gray haired grandmas down to the hotcha adolescents, who like their screen fare spiced with a lot of pep and paprika, "Goodbye Again" is a natural.

story would be foolish. It has to be seen before one can believe that so much fun could be crammed into such short running time. But here's the idea: Bixby is the author of a host of sexy best sellers, Anne is his knowing secretary. On a lecture tour, he runs smack dab into Julie, an old sweetheart, who has the idea that she's the inspiration for "Miriam," Bixby's latest torrid novel. Her husband has the same regard for the author, whom he never has seen, as most husbands have for such celebrities and male screen stars who make the feminine hearts go pitter-patter. Anyway, in Buffalo, while Julie is out gay-timing with Bixby, Anne entertains the outraged husband (and nobody ever saw such an "outraged" spouse as Hugh Herbert is here). Sister Elizabeth and her boy friend lawyer add to the foolishness. Eventually, all unknown to one another, the whole shooting match lands on a night train and everything gets mixed up. Finally, staging a mock trial in a hotel room, the whole thing goes completely, but cleverly, haywire, in a riot of fun. The yarn winds up with Julie going home with Harvey, and Bixby resorting to one of those Harold Lloyd safety-last gags to convince Anne that she really loves him.

They're all clowns in this show. It's all hokum. Even the slow start, which really only establishes characters and identities, becomes funny.

Breezy, ingenious advertising and exploitation are right up the alley for this picture. Even the romantic ring of the title can be used to accentuate the comedy by urging patrons to say goodbye to all cares and rush down to your theatre. Put your personal indorsement on the show; guarantee a big prize for anyone that fails to laugh; build for packed houses for initial performances to create word of mouth advertising and you can certainly count on "Goodbye Again" to fatten the bank roll.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Trick for Trick

(Fox)

Mystery

This may be termed a mystery film, chiefly for want of some more accurate designation, since it is somewhat difficult to ascertain whether it is meant to be mystery, comedy or drama. Concerning magicians, a murder, or rather double-murder, and seances, it makes plentiful use of various devices of trick photography, with trap doors, disappearing chairs, vaults opening in otherwise solid floors, carpets flying back and forth without the touch of human hands and the like.

Whether intentional or not, much of the action becomes comic, drawing laughs from the audience, often, it is true, laughter at, and not with, the picture.

Ralph Morgan, as an ingenious magician housed in a castle-like building on a rocky coastal ledge, has the lead, supported by Victor Jory as a rival trickster and once partner of Morgan; Sally Blane, whose father attends Morgan's seances. They work hard, but succeed in doing but little with the material at hand.

The mystery is according to an elderly pattern, having little of the really unusual, hardly effective, and depending almost in its entirety on the trick technique and often artificial-appearing sets for its mystery atmosphere and story maintenance. A magician's assistant is found murdered, and the detective on the case goes to Morgan for information. Morgan promises to stage a seance at which he will cause the spirit of the dead assistant to appear; she to reveal her murderer. Jory attends the seance, and straps Morgan in his chair before the seance begins. When the lights go up Jory is found murdered, bound in the chair, while Morgan stands quietly nearby. Later it is revealed that Jory was the murderer of the assistant, and that he had been murdered in the chair, to which Morgan had bound him after freeing himself, by the dead girl's father, seeking revenge, and mistakenly believing Morgan had killed her.

Sell the idea of a mystery solved by means of spiritualism and a seance, with the culprit, beaten trick for trick by his rival, being killed in the end. The seance idea should open the way for something unusual in the way of exploitation stunts in connection with the picture, also affording the opportunity for material out of the ordinary in the matter of lobby display.

It would be well not to promise too much in the way of a thriller among mysteries, since the picture actually has little of a thrill nature about it. Play up the trick material and the seance element, since the cast is not outstanding and cannot be depended upon for marquee draw to any large extent.—Aaronson, New York.

She Had to Say Yes

(First National)

Romantic Drama

Considered as an ordinary program picture, "She Had to Say Yes" affords only the showmanship possibilities and entertainment values associated with that caliber of production. Dramatically romantic in atmosphere, the story details the career of a customer's gal—one of those girls who entertain visiting buyers on the loose in a big city. These elements providing the motivating theme, contrasting situation and dialogue comedy are introduced as an offset to the general trend. The locale and atmosphere is of a wholesale dress goods establishment, its employees and customers. Practically all the action is centered about Loretta Young, Talbot and Regis Toomey. Much is told in the comparatively short running time, but due to the absence of color or glamour the show seldom reached the point of stirring preview audience enthusiasm.

In the story, with competition playing heck with business of the Glass firm, Sol adopts the suggestion of using girls from the stenographic department, rather than professionals, to entertain out-of-town buyers. Florence, much beloved by salesman Tommy, is anxious for the thrill, but meets with strong objections. Eventually, as a means of getting extra cash for their marriage fund, Florence goes out with Daniel, and even though he goes on the make for her, she falls in love with him. Tommy meantime does a little bit of cheating with Birdie. Eventually the lovers break up and Daniel becomes infatuated with Florence. With a merger that means much to him in the offing, Daniel is unable to do anything with Luther until Florence, with the connivance of Maizee, gags Luther by having his wife appear on the scene while Luther is entertaining the customer's girl in a private dining room. Sore because he has been given the air, Tommy tells Daniel that Florence isn't on the level and tells how she got Luther to agree to the merger. Then drama and tragedy, lost love and all that until after another argument with Tommy, Daniel discovers that Florence is a real sweetheart.

Names, plus trick exploitation, should be the means of selling this show. Because of its quality, there is hardly any justification for spreading in any way. Taken in stride and anticipating only average business, figuring that the show will measure up to Class B demands, "She Had to Say Yes" will do the volume of business that such a picture justifies.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Warner-First National. Directed by Busby Berkeley and George Amy. Based on the story "Customer's Girl," by John Francis Larkin. Screen play by Rian James and Don Mullaly. Photographed by Arthur Todd. Running time, 62 minutes. Release date, July 15, 1933.

Gambling Ship

Melodrama

This is primarily a man's picture. As the title indicates, it is a gangster yarn of the type provocative of highly melodramatic atmosphere. The romance, due to the adaptation of a dual identity gag, is intriguing but always secondary to the drama. Comedy is that brand generated by audience interpretation of the tense situations, plus that introduced by the stars' associates. The subject is particularly familiar to theatre-goers along the west coast and probably in some spots along the Atlantic seaboard, but in the interior only by means of newspaper and magazine stories. This fact should be advantageously turned by stressing the novelty.

Basically, "Gambling Ship" is really two stories. One part details the romance between Eleanor and Ace. In the beginning, on a transcontinental train trip Ace poses as a wealthy business man and Eleanor as some one from the social register. The fact is that Ace is a big shot gambler, taking it easy until the heat of a recent murder trail cools, and Eleanor is a gangster moll looking for a sucker. That angle takes care of the romance. Still the big feature of the show is the gambling ship atmosphere and its related drama, which constitutes the second story. Vividly detailed is the competition which the various operators make for each other; stealing speed boats, customers, business, and so on; in short adapting the dry land gangster tactics to the deep sea.

Thus after the Ace-Eleanor infatuation is established, the audience becomes aware that Eleanor is Burke's girl. Manning is making things tough for Burke's ship and when he gets hold of a check on which Burke is trying to welch, it's pay-off or else. Burke is trying to sell an interest in his boat to Ace, without success, until the fact is disclosed to him that Manning, his best loved enemy, is operating the chief opposition boat. Much against his wishes, with the picture of the lovely Eleanor continually before him, Ace finally takes over the boat and puts the screws on Manning, by dragging all the gambling business to his boat. Then comes the inevitable gangster conflict. Manning, unwilling to lose all the business, bombs Ace's boat; Ace learns who Eleanor is and she learns who he really is; Manning and his gang come aboard for a quick cleanup. But a storm comes up. Burke is killed. Manning and his gang are lost in the sea, while Eleanor and Ace make safety as the ship crashes on the rocks.

Concocting an excitement-creating campaign that takes full advantage of the romance offered, but stressing the drama of inside gambling-ship revelations, looks to be the most effective manner of stimulating proper appreciation. Because of its theme, the show is strictly an adult attraction, the fact that gambling plays so prominent a part in its detailing makes it inadvisable to feature it as juvenile entertainment.

In addition to straight advertising, there is opportunity for unusual ballyhoo. Such exploitation is almost necessary to concentrate attention on the picture, for despite the inclusion of several favorably known names in the cast, it will be necessary to use showmanship.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Louis Gasnier and Max Marcin. From stories by Peter Ruric. Screen play by Max Marcin and Seton I. Miller. Adapted by Claude Binyon. Photographed by Charles Lang. Running time, 72 minutes. Release date, June 23, 1933.

Ann Carver's Profession

(Columbia)

Drama

The almost perennial conflict, especially in these recent years of the emancipated woman, between young husbands and wives, concerning the wife who seeks to carve a career for herself, forms the central theme of the picture, and serves to lend a wide appeal.

When a story is well told, with the performances finely capable, and a neat touch of comedy properly injected at reasonable intervals, as in this case, the exhibitor should have something to sell. The complete cast is adequate, while the two leading players—and the entire action is actually centered about them, Gene Raymond and Fay Wray—are fairly good marquee material. Miss Wray is known, attractive and smooth in her work here, while Raymond, recent recruit from the Broadway stage, has sprung to a position of prominence by virtue of his ability, again demonstrated in this film. The exhibitor, in fact, would do well to concentrate upon Raymond in his cast selling, since he is deserving of the attention, and the buildup should be advantageous for his future attractions.

The story, not involved, maintains a good pace throughout, and is strengthened by the performances of the leading players, particularly that of Raymond. Raymond, college football hero, marries his fellow student, Miss Wray, who took her degree in law while he was graduated in architecture. Things move smoothly until, weary of the inactivity of home life, Miss Wray turns to the practice of law. Her immediate success, based upon sensational methods of producing evidence in court, far eclipses the lowly drafting job Raymond has in an architect's office. Miss Wray, sought after, busy, has little time for home and Raymond. Finally, Raymond, urged by a friend, turns to night club crooning, with his football starring days as his value.

He leaves home, and when a girl of the club, played well by Claire Dodd, accidentally meets death in their room, he is held for her murder. Miss Wray, after pleading, comes to his defense, and in an emotional courtroom scene, in which she displays her best work dramatically, her plea to the jury, taking the blame for Raymond's plight, on the basis of her neglect of him, is successful, and he is acquitted. She ends her law career at that point, returning to housekeeping, and he to architecture.

Striking the note of the young wife who, outstripping the husband in her profession, brings about a natural rift in the smooth conduct of the home life, should be effective as an advertising angle. Indicate the dramatic courtroom scene and its result, bringing the wife back to the husband at the expense of her profession. Women's organizations should be interested. The picture is rapid, dramatic and generally appealing entertainment, and may be sold as such. Younger adults should find it especially interesting. Nothing objectionable, but hardly juvenile material.—Aaronson, New York.

Poil de Carotte

The Red Head

(Harold Auten)

Drama

Definitely outstanding among the importations of notable motion pictures from Europe must necessarily stand this "Poil de Carotte," the work of Pathe Consortium Cinema, French studio. It is an intensely serious motion picture, adapted from the noteworthy French novel of the same title by Jules Renard, and produced and performed with a fine touch.

It is an adult attraction exclusively. In fact, the Europa theatre, in New York, is definitely prohibiting child attendance during its showing, and this policy should be followed wherever the picture is played. The cast is headed by Harry Bauer, able performer along the lines of the Emil Jannings technique, but actual leader of the players is one Robert Lynen, a French child-actor, who, if it is understood, never before appeared before a motion picture camera.

Playing the part of the Red Head (Poil de Carotte), young Lynen comes very close to making screen history with his performance. Rarely in our experience has a child performer, in France, the United States or any other country, rendered a performance of such keen emotional appeal, innate dramatic ability and thorough naturalness. The role is difficult, yet it is carried through by the boy with a quiet capability which would do full credit to a seasoned veteran with years of dramatic experience. The cast is otherwise excellent, but still the youngster overshadows what becomes virtually his support.

The story is simple, set in a charming countryside background of France, and relates, with an utter simplicity which becomes part of its strength, the story of the youngest child (the Red Head) of elderly parents, and his terrifying loneliness which results from misunderstanding and mistreatment. The father is Harry Bauer, the mother Catherine Fontenay, whose rendition of the highly unsympathetic role of the shrewish wife and vindictive mother is exceptionally good.

The Red Head, who had arrived late and unwanted, is treated viciously by his mother, who lavishes her affections on an older brother and sister; and misunderstood by the morose father, wrapped in his hunting, disgusted with his home life. The boy cannot even react properly to the effort of sympathetic attention offered by the new servant. Finally driven to utter desperation, the child attempts to hang himself in the barn. Warned, brought to a full sense of the plight of the child, the father finds him in time, and the Red Head's future, with his father as his companion, looms brightly. On that happy note the picture ends.

The dialogue is of course in French, but superimposed English subtitles are plentiful, and in any case the trend of the story is perfectly clear to anyone having not the remotest knowledge of the language. This is due in part to the splendid performances.

There is, in this film, not only brilliance of performance and exceptional technical quality, but a completely universal appeal to adults, especially parents, the world over. If the regular exhibitor were to play it as a special attraction, enlisting public groups of the community in support, he might indeed do well with it. Certainly the picture deserves it, is worthy of the most discriminating as well as the largest patronage. Under no circumstances, however, should children be permitted to see it.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced by Pathe Consortium Cinema. Distributed by Captain Harold Auten. Based on the novel "Poil de Carotte," by Jules Renard. Direction and scenario by Julien Duvivier. Release date, May 25, 1933. Running time, 88 minutes.

Good Comedy

Frozen faced Harry Langdon makes for good comedy. His antics are genuinely amusing, and he has the ability to make the most of pantomime, which still remains one of the most effective methods of comedy portrayal. The story in this instance is possessed of a good spark of humor, centering about Harry's mixup with a tough gang in a saloon. In the back room, he goes into the ring, knocking out the champion via a weight in his glove, but when they discover the reason, the complexion of things changes radically. It is good comedy, well done.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Birds in the Spring

(United Artists)

Splendid

Unusual, attractive and highly entertaining is this number of the new Walt Disney Silly Symphonies in color, noteworthy for the excellence of its material and execution as well as for its near-perfection of color photography. The little birds, fresh from the shell, try their wings, and one gets into difficulty with a snake. He is rescued by his father, who paddles him for disobedience. There can be no question as to the tremendous child appeal of the subject, and its excellence makes it worthy of special billing for adults.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Byways of France

(Fox)

Interesting

One of the excellently photographed Fox Magic Carpet of Movietone series, this subject intelligently pictures the people, their customs, work and play as the camera wanders about the little-known countryside of France, delving into the picturesqueness of Brittany, Normandy and other localities. Particularly interesting is the manner in which grapes for wine making are picked, carried and crushed to serve as the wherewithal of one of France's most important industries.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Banker's Daughter

(Educational-Fox)

Novel Cartoon

There is considerable novelty in this number of the Terry-Toons animated cartoons, in which the banker's daughter, kidnaped by the dartardly villain, holds her captive, while the hero rides to the rescue. He arrives just in time as the girl, tied to a chair, is reaching the great circular saw in the lumber mill. The dialogue, carried on in exaggerated operatic style, is amusing, while the subject as a whole is novel and entertaining.—Running time, 6 mins.

PLAYERS ABDUCTED: PEMBERTON

of the suitability of asking me to debate the relative popularity of stage and screen. As well ask Hitler whether he likes pumpernickel better than matzoths.

I might view with alarm if I did not know the "picture brethren" are in as tough a spot as we are. Where we have had to close individual theatres they have had to lock chains. Our studios are in our hats, and when we shut down, the overhead ceases. Their studios represent millions of capital and when they shut down the overhead runs on to be added to future productions. Talkies were born just before the depression and unfortunately the novelty wore off and the public became educated to them while it was still on. So did the bankers. Now the movie makers are faced with the problem of having to produce better pictures with less money. We have all been through the wringer, but they carried more water.

Compares Intakes

Even the world's first and most prejudiced cinema critic knows more people go to see movies than plays. But this is no fair test of the popularity of the two media. As previously hinted, a movie show consists partly of what we delicately call "flesh." How important this is becomes apparent when this feature is dropped. The only fair index is a comparison of a feature picture and a successful play. The best the former can do on Broadway is 10 or 20 weeks at a $2 top; the latter may run a year or more at twice the scale and twice that at the ticket brokers'. Successful plays still gross a million or more. I doubt whether two or three pictures have done that in the past two years. A gross of a few hundred thousand is high for most films. To the answer that the masses are waiting for the feature's release at popular prices, I reply that by the same token they should be awaiting the movie to be made from the play. Since they do not wait, some one must still love the theatre.

To gain any real idea of where both stage and screen are heading a brief survey is important. The stage has carried on for centuries with a gradual improvement in technical facility both as to form and presentation till now, in its most expert examples, it approximates perfection.

The cinema is still in its infancy. The phrase has a familiar ring. Like Peter Pan, it never seems to grow up.

Came Dawn and Miracle

A quarter of a century produced less than a half-dozen photoplays worthy of any consideration. Toward the close of the silent era even the most backward mind had become saturated with the few basic plots and twists the scenarists were able to give them. Attendance began to slip at an alarming rate. Screenland was in a panic. Came the dawn and a miracle. The screen learned to talk.

The movie moguls fought the idea. Many of them knew the pitfalls of unpolished speech. They feared the innovation and refused to adopt it. They had builded a monopoly which had waxed rich and powerful and which required a minimum of brain power to perpetuate.

The march of time forced them all into line, but proved they were right in rebelling. They learned at once it is far more difficult to speak words than to make motions, that the roll of an eye, the twitch of a hip, the toss of a torso, indicating pain, passion and pleasure in a silent picture, is one thing, and suiting intelligent words to the action in a talkie is another. A talkie must make some sense, for its roar kept audiences awake. Their plush palaces were no longer havens of sleep with orchestral obliggato.

The movie makers had talked themselves into show business, and gosh, how they dreaded it. It had been their proud boast that a silent picture never lost money, no matter how bad it was. It was sold by program in advance and the public was the only loser. Now, many a talkie loses money. Never, of course, a Columbia picture. In less than five years the picture public has grown choosey and Broadway grosses slide from a hundred thousand to $15,000 with a change of bill. Hollywood now knows what Broadway has always known, the anguish of guessing wrong.

Where Stage Folk Fail

I shall now go into a clinch to say a few kind things about the movies. Any strange sound you may hear is not static but the noise of a breaking heart. Talkies have developed rapidly till now the best of them approach perfection. I would rather see a poor talkie than a poor play because it is less embarrassing with the poor actors absent. Besides, one can talk through a poor talkie. In neighborhood houses they razz them and make rude noises. I adore Mickey Mouse, news reels and travel pictures. By the introduction of courtesy, refrigerated air, comfortable seats, music and lush if generally phony luxury they have made monkeys of legitimate managers. They have had the wit to try to entertain their audiences every minute the theatre is open, whereas we have dumbly fired our orchestras.

These creature comforts we can and will correct when we get into the money again. The one advantage the cinema has, the thing that has given it power, is the mechanical fact of multiple reproduction. The ability to exhibit its best in a thousand places at the same time has taken the road from us. We can never reclaim it with our poorest, which is what we used to give the provinces when we held the amusement monopoly, but whenever we care to take the trouble to send out expert productions we can get business.

Conscious selection must be considered in determining degrees of popularity. If thousands want pie or cake but can only afford bread, or if only bread is distributed in their neighborhood, the consumption of bread is greater. But it does not follow that the masses prefer bread. Give me the three Barrymores or any other group of stars and I will go into any community in the country and outgross their latest movie. I have heard persons rate talkie versions of plays above their originals, but I have never seen a reproduction I thought superior.

Adapt Plays, Abduct Players

I should be desolate if I thought the talkie had finished the spoken drama, but not as wretched as if the silent picture had been its destroyer. For the talkie is the sallow shadow of the stage, whereas the photoplay had little in common with it. For the first year the movie makers tried to use the old silent brigade, but the results were disastrous. The efforts to coordinate funny voices to contortionistic wriggles was too much for players, directors and public. Since then they have adapted our plays and abducted our actors, dramatists and directors. If they had to return all our talent every movie house in the country would be closed within a month. Even with this wholesale lifting they haven't enough good material, since their selective and creative faculties are undernourished.

Mechanically the talkie can't go much further. Another dimension and color will come, but even then screen characters will be empty ghosts booming from a void. For no reproduction can catch the warmth, the color, the spiritual glow that emanates from a human being. The intangible something that leaps across the footlights from player to auditor and back again is the precious possession of the living theatre and all the gold of Hollywood can't take it away from us. I may end up the last auditor in the Princess Theatre before a one-set show enacted by a single player, but even then that will be my story and I'll stick to it.

USE OF ORGANISTS RISES 25 PER CENT

Demand Growing Despite Summer

Despite the normal seasonal decline of summer and excessively warm weather prevailing virtually throughout the country at the moment, there has been an increase, during the past six weeks, of 25 per cent in the employment of organists in theatres over the country, according to Harry Blair, president of the Noon-Day Club, a New York organization servicing organists in all states.

In numerous cases, employment of the organist has been a case of reinstatement, theatres returning to the use of the organ as an added attraction to the motion picture program after a period generally of straight pictures.

Growing Attention to Organist

Mr. Blair pointed out that the 25 per cent increase, in view of the season, is an indication of the growing attention being paid to the organist as a theatre asset by circuits and independents alike. "It surely speaks well for the theatres' need of this type of added entertainment when each of the circuits is putting on new men every day," he said.

Chief among the reasons noted for the increased employment of organists is the demand on the part of audiences in general for some form of additional musical entertainment, especially since the decline of the stage presentation in many situations. The "community" singing idea, in which the audience joins with the organist in singing the popular music most common to organ programs in theatres, is also seen as of selling value and often very popular with patrons, especially in the more localized situations.

The outlook for a still further increase in the utilization of the organ is considered by circuit music department heads as distinctly favorable. It has long been an established fact that the organist, usually of some prominence, is an important element of the program of the large de luxe theatres. Indicative of the increased use of the organ is the fact that Loew's, Inc., for the past two years retaining only five or six organists, recently had added 20 in Eastern theatres.

The increase of organ programs on the radio also has been noted as partially responsible for the desire on the part of audiences generally for organ entertainment in the theatre. The appeal of the "hit" song, as developed in the musical motion picture, affords an opportunity for a tieup concerning the organ, between the screen and the added attraction.

Circuit music department heads have indicated that in numerous instances it has cost less to employ an organist steadily at the theatre than to permit the organ to stand idle for any length of time.

Theatres Return To Organ Music

Among organists who have been placed within the past six weeks are Mrs. Helen Crawford, New York Paramount; Bettye Lee Taylor at Loew's State, Syracuse; Bob West, Loew's Stanley, Baltimore; Adolph Goebel, RKO 86th Street, New York; Ted Crawford, Loew's, Norfolk, Va., and Al Curtis, Academy of Music, New York.

Using Half an Organ

Indicating the relative gain in employing an organist in lieu of maintaining an idle organ in the theatre, is an incident which occurred recently at the RKO 86th Street theatre in New York. During the lengthy period of operation of a straight picture policy at the house, the organ was seriously damaged by rain. When, after persistent demands by regular patrons, the manager decided to reinstate the organ program, the instrument was found to be in an impossible condition. The cost of repairs approximated $1,000. The re-establishment of the organ was delayed, but when demand continued immediate action was taken.

BETTER THEATRES

remodeling the theatre today

Timely and comprehensive information on costs and methods . . . a practical discussion of problems that are confronting many a theatre owner and manager in these days of Rehabilitation, written by one of the nation's leading theatre architects, S. Charles Lee (who wrote that entertaining series, "A Theatre Architect Visits Europe"). Mr. Lee's article will be augmented by tables of building materials and labor costs for the various sections of the country.

organizing for good management

The second article in John T. Knight, Jr.'s notable series on management and maintenance today, in which this widely experienced authority on the practical problems of theatre operation will analyze and explain the character, value and application of those factors which are essential to an effective theatre organization—the second chapter in a new text book on the motion picture theatre.

color in lighting

The practical application of color to theatre lighting—an article which has been prepared by Francis M. Falge, illumination engineer with a broad background of experience in the theatre, to follow his earlier article on the principles of color. Mr. Falge's discussion is especially intended to suggest effective ways in which the theatres' appearance may be immediately improved.

judging your sound

An effort to place management in a better position to detect flaws in the workings of sound equipment, with the technics involved translated into the terms that all of us can readily understand and apply.

THESE FEATURES, OF COURSE, IN ADDITION TO MATERIAL ON THEATRE LAW, AIR CONDITIONING, RECONDITIONING, DAILY MAINTENANCE, ARCHITECTURE, PROJECTION AND EQUIPMENT

PRODUCT PLANS RUSHED

include: 8 two-reel comedies, starring Clark and McCullough; 6 two-reelers featuring Edgar Kennedy; 6 two-reel Headline Comedies; 6 two-reel comedies, "Fat and Rivets," with Harry Sweet; 6 two-reel "Vagabond Adventure" travel subjects; 6 two-reel Charles Chaplin reissues, with music and sound effects; 39 one-reel Van Beuren cartoons, to be produced in three series of 13 each; 12 two-reel Ely Culbertson shorts, titled "My Bridge Experiences"; 7 one-reel Pathe Reviews; two untitled series, each of five two-reel comedies; 104 issues of Pathe News.

Regent

The company's first of a new series of six features, "The Unwanted Venus," was placed in production in the week at Metropolitan studios, Fort Lee, N. J. Twelve shorts are also set. (See Starmark Pictures.)

Royer Productions

Fanchon Royer announced "Neighbors' Wives" as the first of 15 features.

Spitz

Bill Brown, golf professional, will be starred in 12 one-reel golf shorts, Eugene Spitz producing and directing, filming in the East.

Starmark Pictures

Leonard J. Matchan is president of this new corporation, which has leased space at the Metropolitan studios, Fort Lee, where six features will be produced. Associated with Mr. Matchan are Grover Lee, director; T. Lloyd Richards, production manager; Walter Sheridan, assistant director; Charles Nasca, studio manager, and H. E. Reeves, sound engineer.

"The Unwanted Venus," first of the group, was placed in work this week. Others will be "Lipstick," "Street Corners," "The Blonde Menace," "Fast Money," and one other. Distribution will be through Regent Pictures.

Synchro-Art Pictures

Six short subjects are said to be scheduled for release next season.

United Artists

The feature and short subjects program is nearing completion. In the shorts group, identical with this season's, will be 18 Mickey Mouse cartoons and 8 Silly Symphonies in Technicolor, both one-reelers.

Joseph M. Schenck, president and chairman, and Charles Chaplin negotiated for the release of Sydney Chaplin's first talking picture, with distribution going through United Artists. BIP will make the Syd Chaplin feature in London. Charles Chaplin also contemplates a 1933-34 release. It will be silent.

The company will participate more prominently in production and distribution next season than ever before, at least numerically, with 30 features already set and a possibility of 35 or 40, doubling previous programs. Details will be announced at the annual sales convention, July 17, at Chicago.

Mr. Schenck announced the company will produce 20 features in the remaining seven months of 1933, contrasted with its average of 12 yearly.

Films now in production include Samuel Goldwyn's musical, "Roman Scandals," starring Eddie Cantor, and "The Emperor Jones," with Paul Robeson, being made in Long Island by Krimsky and Cochrane's Film Choice Pictures. Another in work is "Trouble Shooter." Ronald Colman's "The Masquerader" will be a late summer release. This, too, is a Goldwyn film. Mr. Goldwyn will make four for next season. Besides "Roman Scandals," he will have Anna Sten's two features, "Nana" and "Barbary Coast," and a fourth of an American "Cavalcade" type.

Douglas Fairbanks probably will remake "The Mark of Zorro," while Mary Pickford and Charles Chaplin are expected to make early announcements.

Al Lichtman was scheduled to leave for Hollywood this week to discuss plans with studio heads. Hal Horne, advertising director, and Ed Finney, in charge of publicity, will follow on June 20.

It is not expected that the company will adopt the new standard exhibition contract in full. Another clause probably will be substituted for the 5 per cent cancellation clause.

In addition to pictures from Fairbanks, Pickford, Krimsky and Cochrane, the Chaplins, Samuel Goldwyn and Gloria Swanson, United Artists will have, for the first time, 14 feature releases from the Darryl Zanuck-Joseph Schenck company, and several from the Edward Small Reliance unit. Chief Reliance releases will be "Joe Palooka," from Ham Fisher's comic strip, and "Shanghai Gesture," the Florence Reed stage play. In "Palooka" will appear William Collier, Sr., Jimmy Durante, Lupe Velez, Stuart Erwin, Marjorie Rambeau, Anita Louise, Abe Lyman and band and William Boyd. Alfred Werker is the director.

The Schenck and Zanuck affiliation has resulted in one of the most ambitious production plans ever outlined by an independent unit. Among other stars who will be presented under their Twentieth Century Pictures banner will be George Arliss, signed last week; Constance Bennett, Wallace Beery and George Raft, who will appear in "The Bowery," the first release; Constance Cummings, Loretta Young.

Raoul Walsh, director, was engaged to make "The Bowery." Other directors signed were Gregory La Cava, Walter Lang and Sidney Lanfield.

Of equal importance from the contractual standpoint was the lining up of eleven writers as a scenario staff. These include Howard Estabrook, Elmer Harris, James Gleason, Arthur Richman, Leonard Praskins, Sam Mintz, John Huston, Graham Baker, Gene Towne, Harold Long and Laird Doyle.

Stories purchased last week by Twentie Century include: Roland Brown's "Blood Money"; William Robertson's "Unnamed Woman"; Ralph Graves' "Born to Be Bad" and Nathaniel West's "Miss Lonelyheart."

Universal

Zasu Pitts was signed again this week to appear in three or four feature comedies, co-featured with Slim Summerville.

A deal was closed with E. M. Glucksman, president of Mentone Pictures, whereby Universal will distribute 13 two-reel Mentone novelty shorts featuring vaudeville and radio headliners. "All at Sea" is the first. The company will also have three shorts and two features from Bennie Zeidman; 26 two-reel comedies, to be made by Warren Doane, some of which will star Sterling Holloway, Vince Barnett, Louise Fazenda; five serials; 13 one-reel "Strange As It Seems"; 26 one-reel cartoons and 104 Universal News subjects.

Stanley Bergerman's 10 features, to be made with Rowland and Brice, will include four musicals.

Warner Brothers

Following publication last week of the first draft of Warners' new feature program, details were worked out for production of 130 one and two-reel Vitaphone shorts, with two-reelers predominating and music and comedy throughout most subjects. This year, the company is releasing 133 shorts.

One of the first roadshow pictures set for 1933-34 is "Captured," with Leslie Howard and Doug Fairbanks, Jr. George Arliss' "Voltaire" will probably be another.

World International

William Allen's three-reel production, "Nature's Outcast," about a battle between a rattlesnake and a racoon, is the first of 12 shorts.

Public Willing To Be Sold, Says Lou B. Metzger

The public is still willing to be sold, in the opinion of Lou B. Metzger, operator of the Spreckles theatres, San Diego, Cal., in New York this week for a short stay, but that public has to be sold, and the selling is necessarily based on the seller having something that public wants.

As the result of a general shortage of money, however, it is Mr. Metzger's belief that the show-going public is more selective than in the past, requiring that the seller bring "his wares closer to them by careful analysis, hearty exploitation and sensible intelligent advertising."

"I don't believe that the public ever wanted more to be entertained than they do now, but never did we have less chance of fooling them," declared Mr. Metzger. "Therefore the old theory of letting the good attractions take care of themselves and overselling the bad ones has gone by the boards. I find it is necessary to sell a winner right down to the ground and milk it for all it is worth, and it is, therefore, just as important to sell well, but not oversell an ordinary attraction, so as to retain the public confidence and good faith."

The Coast exhibitor was highly emphatic in expressing his belief that every theatre needs its own concentration; "that they will not run automatically and every little thought and idea must be put into execution immediately. And above all," he continued, "I honestly and truly believe the public will gladly come, and will continue to come as long as we have reasonably good attractions and a really good idea of how to sell them."

"I still believe in the motion picture business, and I believe in the exhibition end of it, and if the producers, who are really the sales managers of the business, both to the exhibitor and to the public, will make reasonably good attractions, I believe we, at the other end, will find ways and means to market them for all there is in them."

Julia Gordon Dies, 28 Years in Films

Death of Julia Swayne Gordon, 54, in Los Angeles recently, after a long illness, removed from the motion picture scene a player who first appeared before the camera 28 years ago, 1905, with the McCullum and Parker studios. The actress was a protege of the late Jessie Bonstelle.

Miss Gordon was a Vitagraph star for ten years, until the company's dissolution in 1917. Rex Ingram took her to Hollywood in 1923 for a lead in "Scaramouche."

Among Miss Gordon's many pictures since 1929 are "The Younger Generation," Columbia; "The Girl in the Glass Cage," First National; "The Viking," MGM; "Scandal," Universal; "Drums of Jeopardy," Tiffany; "Gold Diggers," Warner; "Broken Lullaby," Paramount.

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Columbia

AS THE DEVIL COMMANDS: Neil Hamilton Mae Clarke—We made the mistake of running this on a Sunday. Fair week day picture. Played May 21-22.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

BELOW THE SEA: Fay Wray, Ralph Bellamy—A bit disappointed in this. Columbia would have you believe this is another "Submarine." Heavy advertising failed to draw extra business. Just a good program picture of the action type. Played May 30-31.—R. L. Nedry, Lyric Theatre, Little Falls, Minn. Small city and rural patronage.

BITTER TEA OF GENERAL YEN, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Nils Asther—An excellent picture, carefully and beautifully produced with all the detail necessary to make an oriental atmosphere convincing. Barbara has a fine role and Nils Asther is perfect as the general. He steals the picture and certainly "makes" a place for himself in the picture world. This is the first production I ever saw that actually improved on the original novel. Should be advertised as a special. Rotogravures on this are attractive and cheap. Running time, 89 minutes. Played May 7-8.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

BITTER TEA OF GENERAL YEN, THE: Barbara Stanwyck—A notable production. One of the most finely produced pictures we have shown, but 'way off at the box office on Sunday and Monday. Barbara Stanwyck is good, Nils Asther superb. Toshia Mori a pretty Chinese girl, gives an extremely appealing performance. The only B. O. way to advertise this is to work up real interest in the forceful love affair between Stanwyck and Asther. Promise adventure, mystry, intrigue. It was generally well liked here.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

BLONDE CAPTIVE, THE: Natives—Don't play this thing. Same as any news reel. Just another travel talk. Running time, 75 minutes. Played May 30-31.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

CHILD OF MANHATTAN: Nancy Carroll, John Boles—You can't guess what happens in this picture. Yes siree, Nancy has a baby. She didn't intend to, so she says; it was purely an accident, but accidents will happen. Nancy's mother calls her a "dirty little tramp" when she goes to live with John Boles without marrying him. But Boles rises nobly to the situation and does marry her when he finds out he is to have an heir. Some pictures are made beautiful by the introduction of parenthood into the story but some only achieve cheapness and tawdriness. Personally, I am sorry I showed this picture. Running time, 71 minutes. Played May 26-27.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre Eminence, Ky.—Small town patronage.

CIRCUS QUEEN MURDER, THE: Adolphe Menjou, Greta Nissen—This picture seemed to please the majority, especially the kids. Circus scenes and trapeze performers extra good. Sound, excellent. By no means a special, but just a good program picture and that's some-thun'. Played June 3-4.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Rural patronage.

END OF THE TRAIL: Tim McCoy—A good one for western fans. I have been somewhat mystified, however, as to the ending. The press sheets, and some people have told me the same thing. Tim is supposed to die in the end. Now, which end? My picture closed with Tim very much alive at both ends and his arm in a sling, promising the Indian maiden he would be a father to her. Glad they didn't kill him; I like his pictures.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

END OF THE TRAIL: Tim McCoy—A very fine entertaining action picture. Better than the average of stories in westerns.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SO THIS IS AFRICA: Wheeler and Woolsey—First, this drew the biggest business of several weeks; second, it is not so funny as it is rough and vulgar. I played it to adults (over fifteen years old) only. A lot of the kids who have been twelve for the last ten years aged rapidly when this came to town. Played June 22-23. Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SO THIS IS AFRICA: Wheeler and Woolsey—Hot and then some. Columbia's ace picture of the season drew them to the box-office like flies on honey, kept the house in a continual uproar, and then sent them out to talk over how dirty it was. Wheeler and Woolsey have always meant biz at our theatre, and this is just about their biggest money-maker yet. I think they are the funniest team that ever hit the screen, and can run circles around such wash-outs as Laurel and Hardy, who, in my opinion, couldn't be funny if they had to. The highbrows would think this picture just too vulgar for words, but since they are not the class of people who will patronize your theatre during the run, do not direct your advertising anywhere near them. Put on the hottest ballyhoo campaign you dare to, and reap a real harvest. Short subjects should be after the fashion of the picture, because the majority of your patrons will not come in a mood to enjoy travelogues or class shorts. Played this Wednesday and Thursday. Here's to Prosperity with W. and W. It was a showman's pleasure.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre Morris, Ill. General patronage.

SOLDIERS OF THE STORM: Regis Toomey, Anita Page—Pleased a large crowd on bargain night. An excellent action type picture. Played June 2.—R. L. Nedry, Lyric Theatre, Little Falls, Minn. Small city and rural patronage.

SPEED DEMON: William Collier, Jr., Joan Marsh—A mighty good action picture. Gave good satisfaction on a double bill.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

TREASON: Buck Jones—A very good action picture. Good satisfaction to a Saturday crowd.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

WOMAN I STOLE, THE: Jack Holt, Fay Wray—Personally do not consider this one up to the standard of the usual Jack Holt productions, although it is a fair program picture. No drawing power whatever. Showed to the poorest mid-week since Easter. Barely grossed film rental. Sound not so goood either. Played May 31-June 1.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre Wyoming, Ill. Rural patronage.

First National

BLONDIE JOHNSON: Joan Blondell—Certainly a classy crook story. Should hold attention in the best houses. It went over fine here, and what will please in a small town usually is a mop up in the larger burgs.—Ned Pedigo, De Luxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. Small town patronage.

CENTRAL AIRPORT: Richard Barthelmess—One of the best of the air pictures. Barthelmess always draws for us and well liked. A great show; your patrons will tell you so.—Ned Pedigo, De Luxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. Small town patronage.

CENTRAL AIRPORT: Richard Barthelmess—Not a knockout by any means, but will please the air fans. We played it Decoration Day to excellent business and have come to the conclusion that its unusual drawing power is due, especially in the small towns, to two apparent reasons: First, Richard Barthelmess has gained immeasurably with the fans because of his excellence in "Cabin in the Cotton," the swell show that stamped him with many patrons as a guarantee of good entertainment. In other words, don't let your prospects forget that Dick is the star of the picture. Second, and most important, is the present, unrecognized vogue for air pictures. The producers don't realize it, but it is true and as a result the few air thrillers that happen to have been made in the past few months are cleaning up. This alone accounts for what many exhibitors called the "freakish draw" of Columbia's "Air Hostess." It has repeated with "Central Airport" (a title that's a natural), and now watch Paramount's "Eagle and the Hawk" and see if I'm not right!—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

EMPLOYEE'S ENTRANCE: Warren William, Loretta Young—An entertaining little film that pleased on bargain night. Alice White was the hit of the show, so don't let her slip away from the movies again. Loretta Young's drinking scene is unusually good. Warren William is slipping in public favor. There is only one real drawing angle to this, and I glean it from a program ad—"Give me a job, at any price." However, this supposed cry of out-of-work girls is never fully accounted for in the picture. Amusing, but not big.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

FRISCO JENNY: Ruth Chatterton—This is probably the best picture Miss Chatterton has made in many months. It was well-liked by a good Wednesday-Thursday crowd. I did not care to play up the sensational and sexy side of the story, as so many exhibitors did, but preferred instead to use the San Francisco earthquake thrill angle, and the promise of a great character study by Chatterton. This seems to me to be the more practical and appealing slant, especially to Ruth's fans, because your patrons are well aware that Miss Chatterton is no Mae West! Anyway, some of the ads on this picture went too far. I see Warners have followed this up with "Lilly Turner," a picture with similar flavor. This was a grave error. Why try to thrust the smutty-role reputation on a star who has long been recognized as "the First Lady of the screen?"—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

TIGER SHARK: Edward G. Robinson, Richard Arlen—Excellent action picture for Friday-Saturday. Scenes of tuna fishing authentic and intensely interesting. Drew both children and adults. Robinson is a splendid dramatic artist. He is worth seeing. Business double the usual box office. Played April 21.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

Fox

BROADWAY BAD: Joan Blondell, Ricardo Cortez—No good.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—Everybody seemed to like it; that is, everybody who came. Guess we played it too old for it to have much drawing power.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—Clara has come back 100 per cent improved. Now all she needs is a good story. This one is too hectic, but gave her material for some very good dramatic acting. Her voice is a new one, modulated and in control. Everyone liked Clara, but not everyone liked the story. Business not up to expectations, but patrons pleased. Running time, 83 minutes. Played May 21-22.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

CAVALCADE: Clive Brook, Diana Wynyard—Positively the biggest box office flop for a supposed big picture we ever remember playing and get a load of this just clipped from a trade paper (May 31)—"Fox has decided to aim directly at the foreign markets with a large percentage of its coming product . . . this decision was reached after Sidney Kent had scanned the results of the foreign sales on "Cavalcade" and "Zoo in Budapest" and with these figures in mind had estimated the probable returns from abroad on "Berkeley Square," now in production." . . . Well, if Mr. Kent will scan the returns from the small towns in this good old U. S. A. I am sure he will find the returns as I have found them on both the above mentioned pictures. I have talked to a half-dozen exhibitors in this territory who had the same results as myself. I actually took in a few dollars over rental on "Cavalcade" so if Sidney Kent really made the above statement, it's either one or two things. It's to hell with American audiences or the foreign market means more to Fox than our own. Personally, I am a great admirer of Sidney Kent and I don't believe he intends to neglect our own market. There is no question of the merit of "Cavalcade," but we well know our audiences (as a whole) and will not accept these English casts and there's no use in kidding ourselves. We've tried it too often to our sorrow. They credit Mr. Sheehan with this great production. I understand he is over in England now. Hope he stays there and becomes "crowned." Pardon the length of this report but I couldn't get it out of my system in less words. Running time, 110 minutes. Played May 30-31—June 1.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

CAVALCADE: Clive Brook, Diana Wynyard—And now, boys and girls, here's your headache. If you get film rental and please one person, consider yourself a real showman. When the critics rave, the small town goes broke.—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

CAVALCADE: Clive Brook, Diana Wynyard—It is surely a big stampede with some of the most simple giddy acting and talking people in the picture I ever looked at or listened to. Some parts were really good, but you never heard so much hand clapping in all your life as you will hear in this picture. It seems they wanted to make all the noise they could possibly cram in it. And most all the talking in it did not seem natural, hard to understand. Such language as this we southern folk haven't learned yet. You can play it and pay for it but when it is all over you will never know what it was all about.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

DANGEROUSLY YOURS: Miriam Jordan, Warner Baxter—Fair.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers—Will Rogers continues the most popular star in my town. People come to see him who never get out to other pictures, but I always advertise him well. "Down to Earth" is not up to the standard of usual Rogers' pictures, but it's a good show. Irene Rich is always fine. She helps any picture. There are not many laughs in this one, but there is room for some of Will's philosophy. Played April 2-3.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers—Good yarn concerning depression. Will Rogers good as usual. Business not so good as usual for Rogers.—Philip Rand, Rex Theatre, Salmon, Idaho. General patronage.

FACE IN THE SKY: Spencer Tracy, Marian Nixon, Stuart Erwin—Nice little program picture. Marian Nixon as a demure little farm girl ideally cast. Spencer Tracy as the hard boiled sign painter, and Stuart Erwin as the dumb helper produce plenty of laughs. Running time, 74 minutes. Played May 6-7. —C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

FACE IN THE SKY: Spencer Tracy, Marian Nixon, Stuart Erwin—An extra good program picture. Story interesting. Comedy good. Gave good satisfaction. Played May 25-26.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

FACE IN THE SKY: Spencer Tracy, Marian Nixon, Stuart Erwin—This seemed to be hugely enjoyed by a large bargain nite crowd. Is a nice, small town picture, but has little draw except at low admissions or on a double feature program.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

STATE FAIR: Will Rogers, Janet Gaynor, Lew Ayres—What more can be said about this great picture that has not already been said many, many times? It is perfect entertainment! Lew Ayres seemed to be the favorite here with Janet Gaynor and Will Rogers vieing for second honors. Ayres' charming performance is one of the best of the year. The objectionable scene between Sally Eilers and Norman Foster has been deleted since we showed the film. This picture is typical of life, and there are no exaggerations. For two days we completely forgot about the depression. On Sunday we turned them away, and on Monday had every seat in the house taken. With this, and "Cavalcade," we can forgive Fox for all the lemons they gave us in between.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

FIRST YEAR, THE: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Very weak picture. Gaynor-Farrell team do not draw any more.—Philip Rand, Rex Theatre, Salmon, Idaho. General patronage.

GOLDEN WEST, THE: George O'Brien—A lot of Indians and pony express done into a typical Zane Grey story makes this mighty good entertainment and extraordinary box office value. Three days to better than average business.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

HANDLE WITH CARE: James Dunn, Boots Mallory, El Brendel—This is a delightful, clean comedy-romance. I wanted a show I could recommend for a Woman's Club Benefit, something for the whole family to enjoy. I searched every contract for one, and there are very few of that type. "Handle With Care" is a gem. Little Buster Phelps supplies a great heart interest. It is well directed, and will appeal to adults, so do not over-advertise the "child" angle, although 500 little orphans got jobs as extras. Many told me later how much they enjoyed the picture. Played April 6.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

HELLO SISTER: James Dunn, Boots Mallory—This thing is only six reels long, but they surely crowded in a lot of dirt. Everything from attempted rape, young love and the "consequences," freely discussed by a doctor, so there could be no mistake. other suggestive scenes and a disgusting fight between a character woman and a villain. Dunn's favorite exclamation after he has gotten his sweetheart in trouble is, "Boy, am I proud!" What are Fox trying to do to their stars, to say nothing of our business. Played May 26-27.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

HELLO SISTER: James Dunn, Zasu Pitts, Boots Mallory—A surprise package. From adverse reports on picture was afraid of it. However, audience enjoyed entire production. Business above average. Baby angle might be objectionable to some, but impossible to satisfy them all, anyway. Played June 4-5.—R. L. Nedry, Lyric Theatre, Little Falls, Minn. Small city and rural patronage.

HUMANITY: Boots Mallory, Alexander Kirkland —Another of the Fox Cavalcade of hits, but if you can interest anyone in coming to see it, I'll be surprised.—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

ME AND MY GAL: Joan Bennett, Spencer Tracy —It's rowdy, it's rough and yet there's a straight from the shoulder air about it that makes you like it. It didn't draw, but it was liked. Played May 24-25.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

ME AND MY GAL: Joan Bennett, Spencer Tracy—Both stars well liked in this community. Drew good house considering conditions. Played May 13.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Mixed patronage.

OVER THE HILL: James Dunn, Sally Eilers, Mae Marsh—Splendid picture. All who came praised it. Poor crowd. Talkie versions of old silent pictures never draw for me.—Philip Rand, Rex Theatre, Salmon, Idaho. General patronage.

PLEASURE CRUISE: Genevieve Tobin, Roland Young—No good.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

RACKETY RAX: Victor McLaglen—Good. Plenty of laughs and rough and ready action. Good business. Running time, 75 minutes. Played May 26.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SAILOR'S LUCK: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—Comedy drama with enough slap stick fun to carry a weak story. Pleased. Played May 19-20.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

SAILOR'S LUCK: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—Just a fair programmer. Fox managers and bookers would tell us it was one of the ten best, but it isn't. I would like to hear from someone that has received as many as four good pictures from Fox this year. I kept their announcement book from last year and on every other page it reads "watch Fox this year." I wonder how they feel about that by now.—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SAILOR'S LUCK: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—A knockout and sellout for us. Sammy Cohen's antics on the diving board a scream. Rather hot in spots but nothing offensive. 100 per cent entertainment for the young folks, and they are the ones that we must satisfy, for they are the large majority of the cash customers. Played May 21-22.—R. L. Nedry, Lyric Theatre, Little Falls, Minn. Small city and rural patronage.

SECOND HAND WIFE: Sally Eilers, Ralph Bellamy—In advertising we stressed the author's name, Kathleen Norris, and drew better than an average crowd, especially liked by the women. Running time, 65 minutes. Played May 5-6.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

SMOKE LIGHTNING: George O'Brien—Good Zane Grey western. Average business.—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Not the big hit it should be with these stars. Drew only fairly well. Running time, 78 minutes. Played April 3-4.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Story is changed from the old "Tess," but it is a good drama. Janet does good work, but people like her in a happier type. Excellently cast, and employed good background. Good business. Running time, 76 minutes. Played May 14-15.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

WARRIOR'S HUSBAND, THE: Elissa Landi, Ernest Truex, Marjorie Rambeau—I got a great kick out of this one. However, there was no favorable comment from patrons. Played May 25-26. —D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Freuler

PENAL CODE, THE: Regis Toomey—There's no excuse for trash like this. It drives patrons away. No drawing power. Played May 24-25.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MGM

CLEAR ALL WIRES: Lee Tracy—No good.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

CLEAR ALL WIRES: Lee Tracy—The first Lee Tracy we have played and it will be O.K. if there aren't any more (like this).—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

CLEAR ALL WIRES: Lee Tracy—Pretty punk stuff, we thought. Metro seems to be making Lee Tracy's pictures on the cuff, and cashing in on his present popularity, which will soon wane. Played to reduced admissions and average Saturday night crowd. Nothing to sell here but the star, if he happens to be popular in your town. Accentuate "s-p-e-e-d" in your ads. Fast shorts, cartoons, etc., go good with this, if you must play the darn thing! —Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

DOWNSTAIRS: John Gilbert—MGM might as well have kept this downstairs. Played this a little late, but not late enough. Expected to find some evidence of a very much chastened Gilbert. The difference between chaste and chased has not affected, noticeably, his cockiness. No matter what the world's opinion of John may be, John's opinion of John remains the same, and you know what I mean. Referring again to "running time," would suggest you start running when the audience starts to come out. Minutes to run, depends upon how far your irate patrons decide to chase you. Probably, dear brothers, you had best go "Downstairs" until all symptoms of a mob spirit have evaporated. Further the deponent sayeth not. But ain't that enough? Played June 2. —Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

FAST LIFE: William Haines, Cliff Edwards—Very good. Has everything in it for real entertainment. Running time, 75 minutes. Played May 28-29.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

FAST WORKERS: John Gilbert, Mae Clarke—No good.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

GABRIEL OVER THE WHITE HOUSE: Walter Huston, Karen Morley—Good picture. No drawing power.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

GABRIEL OVER THE WHITE HOUSE: Walter Huston—One fine picture, but I live in a community where they haven't changed postmasters for quite a while and there were some that thought maybe it wasn't so cute.—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

GABRIEL OVER THE WHITE HOUSE: Walter Huston—Sensational! Ballyhoo it to the skies. Don't try advertising this in the same old day-after-day way. It's different! It's a showman's examination. You can promise the prospects a lot without disappointing them, but don't harp too much upon the political theme, using instead in your ads the breadth of the nation at large. We think it best to not say a whole lot about the romantic angle, because this picture is not a romance! Sell it as something electrifying, and entirely different from all other pictures. The cast is secondary, but Walter Huston is worth something. Book racy shorts and you'll have a program of unusual tempo. Played Sunday and Monday to very good business when the river was flooded and the farmers had a heck of a time getting in!—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

GRAND HOTEL: Greta Garbo, John Barrymore, Joan Crawford, Lionel Barrymore, Wallace Beery—The only picture that has held up for a three-day run. People had heard about this or read the book, which is a "hot" one to say the least, and came out to see what it was all about. Majority liked it.—Philip Rand, Rex Theatre, Salmon, Idaho. General patronage.

LOOKING FORWARD: Lionel Barrymore, Lewis Stone, Phillips Holmes, Benita Hume—Lewis Stone is a star in pictures of which the people always say, "Well, if it is Stone, I am sure it will be a good picture." But in this one he has bad support, that is, in part. Lionel Barrymore and Stone both were interesting in this picture. But the balance in the play seemed to have too much of an English brogue or something, making their talking hard to understand, causing the picture to be slow and uninteresting. The female stars in this one are tiresome to look at. Phillips Holmes, also a star in this picture, is a favorite here at my theatre but he could not do his part because the female cast were sorry support for him and he had to close his eyes when he had to look them in the face. Well, there is a fine lesson in this picture if you like to listen to a long talk on depression. Boys, please write to your producers who make pictures for us and beg them to make us pictures that will keep our patrons awake and stop them from walking out disgusted. Think how tiresome it is to sit in a theatre and listen to a two-hour talk, just a continued talk, talk, nothing but talk. It will kill the best theatre on earth. One good picture, then come five bad ones, and then we lose what we made on the one good one. Why, we couldn't keep going playing pictures as long as they give them to us like this. Haven't the producers learned and read enough through the Herald to know what pictures make us all money? I will bet there is not an exhibitor in the game today that will say he or she ever made one dollar out of an all-talking picture. Now take this, for example. Suppose we turn on our radio and some wise, windy guy begins his talk, talk and talk. Then, you will see, those who are listening will soon say, "Get something that has some good songs or music." Anything but a tiresome, continuous line of talk.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

MEN MUST FIGHT: Phillips Holmes, Diana Wynyard—Good program picture.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

MEN MUST FIGHT: Diana Wynyard, Phillips Holmes—If this picture is B. O. it must be the kind only Lifebuoy will cure!—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

OUTSIDER, THE: Harold Huth, Joan Barry—This is not a bad picture but was too long drawn out and did not give satisfaction. Too slow. The acting was good, story interesting, but took too long to tell it. People walked out on it.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

PACK UP YOUR TROUBLES: Laurel and

Hardy—This picture was a surprise. Personally, I like this pair for twenty minutes, but for a whole hour! Not for me! However, my patrons like comedy and it seemed to fit in with their mood as it proved a good drawing card. Running time, 62 minutes. Played April 14.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

PRIVATE LIVES: Norma Shearer, Robert Montgomery—A good, sophisticated comedy-drama with splendid acting and some roughhouse acting to put pep in it, but it fell down miserably. The name killed it.—Philip Rand, Rex Theatre, Salmon, Idaho. General patronage.

RASPUTIN AND THE EMPRESS: Ethel, John and Lionel Barrymore—Good picture. No drawing power.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

RASPUTIN AND THE EMPRESS: Ethel, John and Lionel Barrymore—A wonderful picture. Too good and too big for any small town. Them that we got (that understood what it was all about) said great. Others walked away dazed. Did not get the business it deserved. A big city production. Played May 21-22.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

RASPUTIN AND THE EMPRESS: John, Ethel and Lionel Barrymore—Controversial! Perfect acting, magnificent settings, etc.—but, is it real entertainment? Most of my patrons think not. Metro has a certain type of picture they call "special," i.e., like this, "Grand Hotel" and "Strange Interlude." Unusual pictures, and very good, but they only click in the city. Oh, yes, you can usually get a fair crowd in on account of the big casts, but at least three-quarters go out disappointed and over one-half dislike the picture altogether. And dissatisfied customers seldom forget! Metro made good specials "way back when," like "The Big Parade," "Broadway Melody," "Trail of '98," etc., why not more like those now? Human interest is the thing. Played "Rasputin" Wednesday-Thursday to above-average business. Capitalize on the reputations of "The Royal Family." Classy shorts with this, but make sure they have more entertainment in them than the picture.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

SECRET OF MADAME BLANCHE, THE: Irene Dunne, Phillips Holmes—Played on bargain night, and liked fairly well. Not much to advertise here, except the worn-out street woman angle. You'll have to sell it on the strength of Miss Dunne's previous performances. Wish Metro had kept the original title of "The Lady."—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

SMILIN' THROUGH: Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Leslie Howard—This seems to be the universal picture. I have yet to see an unfriendly review. It is marvelously cast; then almost perfectly directed, and intelligently interpreted by competent, experienced actors. The poignant beauty of this splendid production lingers yet. It cannot be overadvertised. True, it is sad, but everyone likes it. More pictures of this perfection would bring joy to the exhibitor. Running time, 100 minutes. Played April 16-17.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

SON DAUGHTER: Helen Hayes, Ramon Novarro—Most Chinese dramas move too slowly to be popular. Hayes does marvelous work, as does also Novarro. It is beautifully staged and well directed, but nobody came to see it. We did not take in film rental in two days, and had no competition. Perhaps it is too high class, but I think probably the subject is unpopular. Give Hayes something American and modern and everyone will like her. Running time, 79 minutes. Played May 26-27.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

TODAY WE LIVE: Joan Crawford, Gary Cooper—Excellent. Pleased 90%. For some reason we didn't do the business we should, it must be old man depression. Running time, 115 minutes. Played May 19-20.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Cape Charles, Va. Small town patronage.

TODAY WE LIVE: Joan Crawford, Gary Cooper—Crawford and Cooper in a love drama should mean money anywhere from Paris to Keokuk. So give the stars equal billing and go to it. This has unlimited selling angles, and besides the romance, the sea and air thrills should come in for prominent display. Franchot Tone and Robert Young are splendid and deserve mention. It did an excellent Sunday and Monday business for us, and the patrons ate it up from start to finish. It is essentially a man's picture, but draws the woman, too, so there you are. This film is unusually long, so book your shorts accordingly. It seems to me that anything except sport reels will make a nicely balanced program on this.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

WHAT! NO BEER? Buster Keaton, Jimmy Durante—Fair business. Fair picture.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Adelaide Theatre, Nempa, Idaho. General patronage.

WHAT! NO BEER? Buster Keaton, Jimmy Durante—No good but did business.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

WHISTLING IN THE DARK: Ernest Truex, Una Merkel. Good mystery. Truex new but fine comedy material. Advertised the fact that four big companies bid for this mystery story and Truex an excellent stage comedian. Those who came liked the picture. I am told that "Warrior's Husband" (Fox) with Truex is one of the funniest pictures ever made. He promises good comedies for the future so it is well to build him up with the first picture. Merkel good support. My patrons are very tired of Durante comedy and this was a welcome change. Running time, 80 minutes. Played May 19-20.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

THE WHITE SISTER: Helen Hayes, Clark Gable—Very fine picture. Extra drawing power.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

WHITE SISTER, THE: Helen Hayes, Clark Gable—A very good picture to above average business.—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

WHITE SISTER, THE: Helen Hayes, Clark Gable—A beautiful production, which all exhibitors should be proud to show. Helen Hayes is grand, although not quite so good as in "A Farewell to Arms," which is only a matter of difference in roles. Clark Gable is unusually dapper and romantic, and dear Louise Closser Hale is a God-sent gift to every picture in which she appears. It is difficult to imagine anyone not enjoying this film, but there were those who didn't and the chief objection seemed to be over the religious angle, so avoid this in the ads. Play up Romance with a capital R, and with Hayes' and Gable's names on the marquee you should enjoy the same excellent Sunday and Monday business that we did.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

REAL BOOKING AID, SAYS A. B. JEFFERIS

Colonel J. C. Jenkins, with a copy of the HERALD in his right hand and a fishing rod and golf club in the left, is chasing gloom into the seven seas, and A. B. Jefferis of the New Piedmont Theatre at Piedmont, Mo., is one of the many who are fully aware of that fact. Furthermore, Jefferis has found "What the Picture Did For Me" of definite help in booking product for his theatre. So he writes:

"I am enclosing herewith the first reports I have ever sent in to 'What the Picture Did For Me.' In the past I have relied on these reports to a great extent in booking, and if you care to have my reports in the future I will be glad to send them in.

"I greatly enjoy Richardson's writings, and have read them since 1912. Also Col. Jenkins is a gloom chaser."

Paramount

BEDTIME STORY, A: Maurice Chevalier—Delightful! Chevalier comes very close to being at his best in this frisky, frothy, spicy, yet human and appealing story that everyone will go for in a big way. Baby LeRoy (the cutest kid yet) steals all scenes in which he appears and Helen Twelvetrees is very sweet in the role of the baby's nurse. The music was excellent, and the scene where Chevalier wheels the baby through the park is a knockout. In addition the picture has its naughty moments, so don't omit spice from the ads. We guarantee this picture to be a hit wherever it is shown. Played Sunday and Monday. Business okay, considering the pre-summer hot weather.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

BIG BROADCAST, THE: Bing Crosby, Stuart Erwin—We played this after it had played all the houses in this territory; consequently our business was not so good. It will attract some, however, who do not care for pictures. Will please 90 per cent. Running time, 86 minutes. Played April 12-13.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

BIG BROADCAST, THE: Bing Crosby, Stuart Erwin—Well liked by all. Business bad. I wonder why we exhibitors keep on losing our shirts. Guess we'll have to go prospecting for the yellow metal Can't take in a plugged quarter at the box office. Everyone digs down deep in the wallet for nickels and pennies; haven't seen a five dollar bill all winter. —Philip Rand, Rex Theatre, Salmon, Idaho. General patronage.

THE DEVIL IS DRIVING: Edmund Lowe, Wynne Gibson—Entertaining story showing how "hot car" gangs operate. Clever character work and an appealing boy character. Played May 21-22.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

THE DEVIL IS DRIVING: Edmund Lowe, Wynne Gibson—Enjoyed by 90 per cent. Smallest audience in several weeks. With both banks closed, business is seriously affected. Played June 3.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Mixed patronage.

FAREWELL TO ARMS, A: Gary Cooper, Helen Hayes—A great deal of credit, as a matter of fact, heaps of it, is due all the principals who took part in this, one of the greatest pictures to be screened here in this theatre in two years. It is so well done that you cannot pick a weak spot. Business better than average through the four days' showing.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

FAREWELL TO ARMS, A: Helen Hayes, Gary Cooper—Good special. Only fair business. Ladies liked it. Men stayed away. Superb acting. Cooper and Hayes made a new name for themselves.—Philip Rand, Rex Theatre, Salmon, Idaho. General patronage.

FAREWELL TO ARMS, A: Helen Hayes, Gary Cooper—One of the most touchingly beautiful pictures of the year. In our opinion Helen Hayes is at her best, as is Gary Cooper, who surprises because of rather awkward past performances. It is frank, like the book, so we advise the pink ticket on this one. Once you get him in, though, the intelligent patron should find nothing to offend, because of the delicate handling of the theme. A splendid picture, but below average at the box-office on a Thursday-Friday-Saturday run. Just is not small town entertainment. The only way we can suggest to make it B. O. in the sticks is to play up the love theme as you never played up a love theme before. The Hayes-Cooper combination should mean money! Smut and cheap advertising is out, however. Slap-stick comedies and such do not fit in with this class of production, so advise using scenic, musical act, travelogue or the like with this.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

HELLO EVERYBODY: Kate Smith—Although this was a fairly good picture, it fell flat here. Kate's radio fans are evidently not in my territory.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HERITAGE OF THE DESERT: Randolph Scott—Gave satisfaction. Attendance fair. Played May 27. —C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Mixed patronage.

IF I HAD A MILLION: All star—Different. Series of stories in one. Good picture. Funny, sad, dramatic. Name scared them; don't know why. Poor crowd at 25c, 15c and 10c.—Philip Rand, Rex Theatre, Salmon, Idaho. General patronage.

ISLAND OF LOST SOULS: Charles Laughton, Richard Arlen—Played this to the best business in months. It is different from anything else ever shown. People knock it, then come back and bring others to see it. We thought is a great piece of entertainment.—Ned Pedigo, De Luxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. Small town patronage.

KING OF THE JUNGLE: Buster Crabbe, Frances Dee—Clean, entertaining tale of the jungle, shifting to circus. Used this as a benefit tieup with Parent-Teachers' organization. Was O. K. for that or any other showing. Played May 17-18.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

KING OF THE JUNGLE: Buster Crabbe, Frances Dee—Not another "Tarzan" but almost as good. Buster Crabbe does not out-physique Johnny Weismuller, but is a better looking youth. In addition to the sex-appeal angle, you have here a circus fire and the stampede of the animals through the city. Real thrills to promise your patrons. Played this on a Friday-Saturday double feature program with RKO's "Lucky Devils." Fair business.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

LADY AND GENT: George Bancroft—This was a free show for the benefit of special sales by merchants. However, picture so satisfactory that we feel we must mention it. Played May 24.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. General patronage.

LADY'S PROFESSION, A: Alison Skipworth, Roland Young—Another pleasing picture from Paramount. Not big by any means, but one that will please most of the customers.—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

LUXURY LINER: George Brent, Alice White—We found this a most acceptable program picture. With all the action laid on board a big liner, there was enough drama, romance, comedy and action for everyone to enjoy. Hope we see Alice White again soon.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd—Harold Lloyd does not produce enough pictures to be a popular comedy star. Although I advertised this as a special, it did not draw and did but little better than film rental. Appearing once a year is not enough to train fans. A comedy star should produce several comedies a year and less expensive ones. The Lloyd pictures were always clean comedies, and we hate to see him lose favor. Played April 7-8.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd—Just a mighty

good comedy but no fault of Lloyd. We have hundreds of comedians that are really funny now. One of them with his part would have created a sensation. How this fellow Lloyd ever thought he was funny is away beyond me.—Ned Pedigo, De Luxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. Small town patronage.

MURDERS IN THE ZOO: Charles Ruggles, Lionel Atwill—It's very good of its type. But our people are fed up on murder pictures. Running time, 55 minutes. Played May 15-16.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Cape Charles, Va. Small town patronage.

MYSTERIOUS RIDER, THE: Kent Taylor, Lona André—A fair western. Kids raved about it but not the adults. Not as good as the silent version by Fox. Attendance very light.—Philip Rand, Rex Theatre, Salmon, Idaho. General patronage.

NIGHT AFTER NIGHT: George Raft—Plenty good picture. Much to put it over. Get them in and they will be pleased. Paramount made a bunch of good ones this year. So think I.—Ned Pedigo, De Luxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. Small town patronage.

NIGHT OF JUNE 13, THE: Clive Brook, Lila Lee —Very good story, well acted, but did not draw an average business for us. No fault of the picture. If you can get them in, the picture will please. Running time, 74 minutes. Played May 12-20.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

NIGHT OF JUNE 13: Clive Brook, Frances Dee, Gene Raymond—Good picture, but no one would believe me. Old picture. I can't buy 'em new. Can't even buy "Palmy Days" without taking a flock of lemons. Wouldn't sell me "42nd Street." Can't get "State Fair" and "Cavalcade" without giving Fox all the dough in the state plus 40 per cent of gross. Metro won't book me "Smilin' Through" until I play off a hundred programs. Such is life in the Rockies. When Congress gets through with Morgan I hope they will tackle Hays.—Philip Rand, Rex Theatre, Salmon, Idaho. General patronage.

PICK UP: Sylvia Sidney, George Raft—This is a human interest story that should please 100%. The public senses something good here, so plug the Sidney-Raft team and the Vina Delmar down-to-earth love story, and sell it as another "Bad Girl." Cut-out heads of Raft and the wistful Sylvia, hung from the marquee over the box-office and facing each other, should prove a magnet. Played Friday-Saturday on a double feature with John Wayne in "Telegraph Trail," but "Pick Up" could easily mean "Stand 'Em Up," even on a Sunday bill, booked single. Any good shorts will go swell with this. It's a natural for the younger set!—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

SHE DONE HIM WRONG: Mae West—Risque and risky! Mae West sizzles across the screen, and turns the town torrid. Funny thing, this was a smash hit in the cities, but only average in the tank towns, whereas this position was just reversed in the case of another Paramount picture, Kate Smith's "Hello, Everybody." No wonder the producers have so many headaches trying to please the great majority. I personally enjoyed the flameproof West very much, but opinion was well mixed between our average Wednesday-Thursday crowd. Not for the chillun'.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

SIGN OF THE CROSS: Fredric March, Claudette Colbert—We were very well pleased with business on this one. Drew better than we expected. In spite of the fact it is sad and very distressing, it was a picture that people told their friends not to miss. Thank you, Mr. DeMille, for giving us something really worth showing. Running time, 123 minutes. Played May 22-23.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

SIGN OF THE CROSS, THE: Fredric March, Landi, Claudette Colbert—A great picture. It gets that class who are not regulars. Has plenty of excitement and lots of history and bible work in it and it will get them in. Shown here during closing days of school. Yet it did average and that's sumphin.—Ned Pedigo, De Luxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. Small town patronage.

SIGN OF THE CROSS: Fredric March, Elissa Claudette Colbert, Elissa Landi—Was disappointed in the picture, although it did excellent Sunday-Monday business. Believe it would be better to play it mid-week. Although the film is well acted and lavishly produced, it is too long, too boring, and too utterly devoid of human interest. Not comparable to Cecil B. DeMille's silent epics.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

SONG OF THE EAGLE: Richard Arlen, Charles Bickford—Good. Did about average biz. Running time, 83 minutes. Played May 26-27.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Cape Charles, Va. Small town patronage.

STRICTLY PERSONAL: Marjorie Rambeau, Dorothy Jordan, Eddie Quillan—Slightly above average business and seemed to please.—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

UNDER COVER MAN: Nancy Carroll, George Raft—Excellently played. Would be pleasant to see what Raft could do in another kind of role. Played May 20.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Mixed patronage.

UNDER THE TONTO RIM: Stuart Erwin—The Hog Ranch business gets several laughs but the "book" gag fell flat here. Better than the average western.—Harry Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas. Small town patronage.

RKO

ANIMAL KINGDOM, THE: Ann Harding, Leslie Howard—A fine play made into a well-acted picture but not suitable for the small towns. The players talk, talk, talk, and never seem to get anywhere. Too action-less! Ann Harding is mis-cast, Leslie Howard good, and Myrna Loy and William Gargan excellent. Played it on Sunday and Monday to good business, but think it would be better played mid-week. You will need to appeal to class audiences with this.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

CHEYENNE KID: Tom Keene—A very acceptable western. Played May 27.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

CHRISTOPHER STRONG: Katharine Hepburn, Colin Clive, Billie Burke—No good.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

CONQUERORS, THE: Richard Dix, Ann Harding —A fine big picture that drew well and pleased. The only adverse comments were on the killing of the little boy, an unnecessarily shocking sequence; also the engineer on the train that killed him was either drunk or asleep, as he came tearing up with his throttle wide open and the boy on the crossing in plain sight for a mile or more. Played May 26-27.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

CONQUERORS, THE: Ann Harding, Richard Dix—A splendid picture, epic in nature, giving in excellent plot the history on the panics occurring in the last eighty years, through the world war to the present. Ann Harding and Dix excellent in roles from youth to old age. Ann a favorite here. High school students said this was the best picture they had ever seen. Advertise as a special as it surely is one. Running time, 80 minutes. Played April 30-May 1.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

DIPLOMANIACS: Wheeler and Woolsey—Great entertainment. Big improvement over "So This Is Africa," inasmuch as they don't go into the gutter (much). Just enough dancing and singing to "pep" it up and the musical score throughout is excellent. Business away below former Wheeler-Woolsey, which I attributed to the bad reaction of "dirt" in the "Africa" picture. Running time, 61 minutes. Played June 4-5.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

GIRL CRAZY: Woolsey-Wheeler—This pair has drawing power. No matter how old their features, they get 'em in. Played May 30-31.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

GREAT JASPER, THE: Richard Dix—This is Richard Dix's best picture in many, many months, and is a fine piece of entertainment. We played it on a Friday-Saturday double bill along with "The Mask of Fu Manchu." Both pictures seemed to please. Dix is not a favorite with me, but seems to be well liked by my patrons. Play up the star, telling them he is "as you like him," being careful to employ the ne'er-do-well lover theme. This picture has an unusually good cast, notable among them being Florence Eldridge (Mrs. Frederic March), giving one of the most expertly restrained performances I have yet seen, and Bruce Cabot, who surprises as a high-pressure lover. Any varied group of shorts will go with this. We had average attendance.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

HELL'S HIGHWAY: Richard Dix—Fair. Guess we played it too old. Running time, 60 minutes. Played May 17-18.—J. E. Tunstall Nottawa Theatre, Cape Charles, Va. Small town patronage.

HOLD 'EM JAIL: Wheeler and Woolsey—Not up to standard. Why not another like "Rio Rita" with these stars contributing the comedy to a better plot? Another like this one and these stars are done. Running time, 76 minutes. Played April 23-24.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

KING KONG: Fay Wray, Bruce Cabot.—Business far less than expected, due probably to fact that company refused prior dates that were better while they argued over dates for tripe pictures. "New York," that strange mysterious outfit, is not content with killing circuits, it wants to regulate our dating and kill us. RKO, well, they get less percentage returns and are stuck with checking charges, but they prove something. I wonder what they prove? We will live. Will they?—Hermam J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

KING KONG: Fay Wray, Robert Armstrong—A wonderful picture of its kind, and it seemed to be the kind they had been waiting for. Best business on three day run for many months. While picture has some horror stuff it is free of suggestion and even the youngsters were in most cases too busy figuring how it could be done to be very scared. We projected it seven times and still found it interesting. Played May 28-29-30.—P. G. Estes, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

KING KONG: Fay Wray, Bruce Cabot, Robert Armstrong—Here's a thriller and will draw them in. Best business this year except "State Fair." Some may not like it, but it will hold their interest just the same. Played May 28-29.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small own patronage.

KING KONG: Fay Wray, Bruce Cabot—Good drawing power.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

KING KONG: Robert Armstrong, Fay Wray, Bruce Cabot—"Kong" is a triumph in trick photography, but has little to offer besides that. A natural at the box office, with opinion here divided on its merits. Just book it, circus up the front, employ sensational advertising, and prepare to pay up a lot of your old debt. BUT—don't let the patrons think it's another wild-animal opus. Fay Wray and Bruce Cabot are very good, so play up the romance along with the thrill angle, an don't let them forget that the beast charges through New York City. Played it Sunday and Monday. Swell biz.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE: Mitzi Green, May Robson—Plenty of children but no adults. They listen to it too much on the radio. I used this on a day when a scholarship contest was being held and the Commercial Club sent all the children to the show. Very clean, interesting picture. Buster Phelps a great little actor with Mitzi. Played May 5-6.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

MEN ARE SUCH FOOLS: Leo Carrillo, Vivienne Osborne—A very good program picture. Acting fine. Story interesting.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

NO OTHER WOMAN: Irene Dunne, Charles Bickford—No good.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

PAST OF MARY HOLMES, THE: Helen MacKellar, Eric Linden—Just another picture. Well acted and perhaps will please when patrons are not too fed up on big ones.—Ned Pedigo, De Luxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. Small town patronage.

PENGUIN POOL MURDER: Edna May Oliver—Fair. No business.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

PRIVATE JONES: Lee Tracy—They must work Lee Tracy overtime to get him in so many pictures. This is not a great film, but will be thoroughly enjoyed in all small towns. A good Saturday nite show. Fine business.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

ROCKABYE: Constance Bennett—This is a typical Bennett sex drama, just as it is supposed to be. It is good; Constance Bennett is popular here. Her clothes are beautiful; her acting is good. Joel McCrea is adequate support and Jobyna Howland adds all the comedy anyone could wish. The picture will be improved if you cut the scene from the place where Constance scrambles eggs to the fade-out. Why a director makes a fine dramatic actress do cheap comedy, we don't known. Without this scene, the picture is good. Of course, it is not for children. Running time, 75 minutes. Played April 9-10.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

SPORT PARADE, THE: Joel McCrea, Marian Marsh—A good one day program picture. Makes a good Saturday show. Played May 23-24.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SWEEPINGS: Lionel Barrymore—This is splendid. I cannot recall better characterization by the elder Barrymore, and I've seen them all. RKO can be even prouder of "Sweepings" than "King Kong." I liked it much better, and so, on the whole, did my patrons. So tense did it hold the audience, that when the last scene faded out, a wave of applause swept the theatre. This is the first time that I can remember of ever having such a thing happen at the end of a picture. The ending is tremendously effective. I had no idea it was such a good film, and booked it in on a Friday-Saturday double feature with Hoot Gibson in "The Gay Buckaroo." The latter was punker than punk, especially beside "Sweepings," which I would now advise playing alone anywhere in the week, because it has the real merits to stand on its own two feet. Play up the Chicago fire angle, Barrymore's superb character work, and a suggestion of Eric Linden's illicit romance. You know the "rich playboy seduces the little shop girl" angle. With these three points to the front, "Sweepings" should prove excellent B. O. as it did for us.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

TOPAZE: John Barrymore—This is a rather slow-moving comedy, that my patrons did not quite seem to get. "Topaze" is brilliant satire, that will click only with ultra-sophisticated audiences. The most human ad angle seems to be Barrymore as a school teacher. Although Myrna Loy has very little to do, her name should be prominent. Let music dominate the short subjects. We used this for a benefit show on Friday, and had very good business. Not a Sunday show, and not exceptional for Saturday, because, despite the schoolroom scenes, children will not like or understand this picture. A class programme that should be advertised on the order of George Arliss' films, notably "Old English" or "The Millionaire."—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

United Artists

KID FROM SPAIN, THE: Eddie Cantor—They don't make any better entertainment than this one. The star a wow and the whole cast great. Fine photography. 100% satisfaction. A regular show for any house. You can guarantee satisfaction and the picture will make good. Played May 28-29.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Universal

BIG CAGE, THE: Clyde Beatty—A hard picture to put over here. Advertised and exploited but only average receipts. Beatty fine and exciting and tense moments in film. Only explanation for failure at box office—too many animal pictures. Played May 16-17-18.—R. L. Nedry, Lyric Theatre, Little Falls, Minn. Small city and rural patronage.

BIG CAGE, THE: Clyde Beatty, Anita Page—Boy, are we getting fed up on these wild animal films. One after the other they've come, till we're getting so we wrestle with lions in our sleep. Universal's contribution to the cycle comes at least 6 months too late to be of any real interest. "The Big Cage" has its moments, and Clyde Beatty seems a likable fellow, but the picture has very little romance and is so much "animal" that we got pretty bored, and so did the patrons. The kids liked it tho', and we can't complain a whole lot because business was good, but it was only because we played it on Saturday nite. The whole thing is just a mess of roars, growls, screams. Can't say much for it.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

COHENS AND KELLYS IN TROUBLE, THE: Charles Murray, George Sidney—Best Cohens and Kellys picture we have run. For some reason they don't go over here. Running time, 69 minutes. Played May 24-25.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Cape Charles, Va. Small town patronage.

COHENS AND KELLYS IN TROUBLE, THE: Charles Murray, George Sidney—One of this team's best. The naturalness of Cohen and Kelly is their strongest feature. Book this one, you will get your money's worth. On account of school activities, it being the closing week, attendance was poor, but picture pleased all who saw it. Running time, 68 minutes. Played May 27-28.—Estes & Estes, Merry Land Theatre, Addison, Mich. Small town patronage.

FOURTH HORSEMAN, THE: Tom Mix, Average western to average business. The title has no relation to the story. Played May 30-31.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

FOURTH HORSEMAN, THE: Tox Mix—A bit draggy in spots. Mix shows his age in this one. There are still a large number of Mix fans who will regret his retirement. Played May 27.—R. L. Nedry, Lyric Theatre, Little Falls, Minn. Small city and rural patronage.

LUCKY DOG: Charles "Chic" Sale—If you have this bought you have been buncoed. Don't play it. Universal should have had more sense than make it, more honesty than to release it.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

NAGANA: Tala Birell, Melvyn Douglas—A very good picture of its class. Male lead stronger than female. Could have been improved if Japanese doctor had been exchanged for an American. Stars whom one can not understand weaken any picture. About one-third of the so-called stars should be banished and clear understandable voices substituted. Only then will be have 100% entertainment. Attendance fair. Running time, 74 minutes. Played May 20-21.—Estes & Estes, Merry Land Theatre, Addison, Mich. Small town patronage.

OKAY AMERICA: Lew Ayres, Maureen O'Sullivan—Best gangster newspaper story to date. Sad ending but was liked. Business fair. We have lost steadily for two years. Nothing we run really pays. We are hanging on by our bushy eyebrows hoping for a "New Deal."—Philip Rand, Rex Theatre, Salmon, Idaho. General patronage.

OUT ALL NIGHT: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—Fine business. They want domestic comedy so bad their tongue hangs out, but Universal gets worse each time it makes a Pitts-Summerville and it won't be long now until they kill this pair with salacious and lascivious stuff. The other producers are too dumb to note the need of domestic comedy, so Universal has the field alone. The others are making murders and mysteries under mass production.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

ROME EXPRESS: Esther Ralston and foreign cast—A greatly over-rated production. Swell from an artistic viewpoint, but viewed from the box office angle a flop. Many walkouts. There is no place on the playing time of the small city exhibitor for these foreign productions. Played May 25-26.—R. L. Nedry. Lyric Theatre, Little Falls, Minn. Small city and rural patronage.

TOM BROWN OF CULVER: Tom Brown— A fine picture which won't draw at all. Should have been put on for Boy Scout benefit.—Philip Rand, Rex Theatre, Salmon, Idaho. General patronage.

Warner

BLESSED EVENT: Lee Tracy—In which Lee does the keyhole artist stunt in the most approved W. W. style. While he dominates the picture, his supporting cast was just a little too good to suffer total eclipse. The several character actors really gave stellar performances. I especially liked Emma Dunn as Lee's Mother. Just one point I should like to have cleared up. With so many Blessed Events, why not one baby? I mean a real infant. Played May 21-22.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

WHAT THE DOCTORS DID TO ME

And now look what Steve Farrar has gone and done. In a hospital 17 days and he up and writes a report on it. At first we thought it was a sequel to "Night Nurse." Anyway, we're glad he's back.

FUN IN A HOSPITAL: Ten Pretty Nurses, 17 days. This is the first report in over a month and what the doctors did to me during that time is nobody's business; but I'll tell you about it. On May 3, the rubber-tired hack called for me and took me to the hospital where three good doctors opened me up and looked over my engine, taking out several parts. When I woke up there was a pretty nurse holding my hand and asking "How do you feel?"

They tell me I came pretty near to cashing in, but am up and around again now. But while I was in the hospital 16 wire fox terrier pups arrived. (Breeding them is my hobby.) So before I send in any reports on pictures I am going to have to show some expert salesmanship and sell these 16 pups. But I'll be back soon in this department.—STEVE FARRAR, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill.

DARK HORSE, THE: Warren William—Darned good little picture. Darn bad little gross. Darn sad little exhibitor. Could have used "The Dark Horse" with greater profit. Played May 23.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napolenville, La. Small town patronage.

EX-LADY: Bette Davis, Gene Raymond—Another neat little number from Warner Bros. My patrons seem to like Bette Davis, after having seen her in that other swell Warner film, "Cabin in the Cotton." However, she is not a big box-office star yet, so mainly this film will have to depend on the sex angle for its draw. The sound and photography of all W. B. pictures is perfect, and "Ex-Lady," like the others, has a swell musical accompaniment throughout. If only all the companies would realize how impressive a musical background in any picture is, they wouldn't go another moment without a staff orchestra. So far, I have found music used only in Warner and occasionally in RKO films, rarely anywhere else, although I recall that "Pick Up" had an effective musical strain through most of it. We played "Ex-Lady" on bargain nite to a little below average business, because the farmers are working so late, but it's a honey of a picture anywhere you put it.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

FORTY-SECOND STREET: Warner Baxter, Bebe Daniels, George Brent, Ruby Keeler—Greatest box-office musical in years! Business beyond compare! Thanks a thousand times, Warner Bros.—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

GIRL MISSING: Glenda Farrell, Ben Lyon—Good program picture, entertaining from start to finish, nice small town picture. Running time, 69 minutes. Played May 22-23.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Cape Charles, Va. Small town patronage.

HARD TO HANDLE: James Cagney—Fast and funny. Played June 4.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

PARACHUTE JUMPER: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—Good action picture with some witty remarks. Appeals to all classes. Fair business. Running time, 72 minutes. Played May 28-29.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

A SUCCESSFUL CALAMITY: George Arliss—An excellent picture, clean, fine comedy-drama. Old and young here have learned to love Arliss, so we did good business on this one. We can always depend on his product for family trade, and people ask: "When are you having another Arliss?" It is a joy to show them! I am glad my patrons appreciate the work of a high class artist like Arliss. Running time, 72 minutes. Played May 28-29.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

WAX MUSEUM (MYSTERY OF THE): Lionel Atwill, Fay Wray—Color. This is a very interesting picture to people that like morgues and dead people and believe it or not there is them that does like this very kind of entertainment and told me so.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

World Wide

TRAILING THE KILLER: Lobo, the wolf dog—The finest animal picture ever made. Very little dialogue. Photography and scenery excellent. Here is a Friday and Saturday show that you can exploit to the skies and it will give 100% satisfaction. Played May 24.—R. L. Nedry, Lyric Theatre, Little Falls, Minn. Small city and rural patronage.

Shorts

Columbia

CASTAWAYS, THE: Mickey Mouse—Extra good cartoon. Running time one reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

FOX HUNT, THE: Silly Symphony—A very good cartoon.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Educational

A FOOL ABOUT WOMEN: Andy Clyde—Good old-fashioned slapstick that kept the house in a roar. Excellent for Saturday night. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

ACROSS AMERICA IN TEN MINUTES: Hodge Podge Comedy—Just a fair novelty reel. Running time, one reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

TORCHY COMEDIES: Are great stuff for provincial burgs like this.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

MGM

ASLEEP IN THE FEET: Pitts-Todd—A very funny two-reel comedy.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

ROOSEVELT, THE MAN OF THE HOUR: Composed of news reel cuttings, going back to when Roosevelt started in public life, with announcer throughout. Of course, it was interesting, but not the picture I thought it would be.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Paramount

THE DENTIST: W. C. Fields—Excellent slapstick Sennett comedy. Running time, 20 minutes.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

WONDER GIRL, THE: Babe Didrickson—This is a very enjoyable "Sports Eye" showing all the different things this girl does in sports. Running time, one reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

RKO

CLARK AND McCULLOUGH: They need a new director. Not so hot.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

VENICE VAMP: Fable—Very good music, good photography. Better than the average.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

United Artists

FATHER NOAH'S ARK: Silly Symphony—A wonderful cartoon. Color. Very funny.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Universal

MY OPERATION: Vince Barnett—A good comedy.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

NORTHERN EXPOSURE: Broadway Brevity—All color two-real dancing revue. Patrons ask when we are going to have another.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

THREE'S A CROWD: Merry Melody—Exceptionally good. The children like these better than Mickey Mouse.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Pipestone, Minn.

DEAR HERALD:

Minnesota looks better and better every day. You can see green wheat fields in every direction as far as you can look. The corn is coming up, the cherry and apple trees are in full bloom, the alfalfa is knee high and the green pastures are full of contented cows. The barmaids are dispensing Minnesota "prosperity" in about every cafe and Old Man Depression has got disgusted with his job and has thrown up the sponge. Hurrah for Minnesota!

S. B. Hulett of the Grand theatre at Madison has become a member of the Great HERALD family and from now on Madam Prosperity will have her headquarters in the Grand theatre and S. B. will look the depression in the face and say "Oh, piffle on you." It is a mark of distinction to have the HERALD lying around the office where the public can see it, and S. B. is rather a distinctive looking gentleman.

William Fleter of the Broadway at Canby was busy billing his show when we called. He took time out long enough to write a check for a renewal of his subscription and we didn't detain him any longer. He's a hard working boy and if there is any business around Canby we'll betcha he gets it.

L. V. Feldman of the Orpheum at Pipestone has two hobbies, building rock gardens and giving the people of Pipestone the best entertainment available. He has a rock garden in his yard at his home that is the pride and joy of the whole community. People come for miles around to see this garden. He has gathered every kind of a stone there is in Minnesota and South Dakota. The lobby of his theatre is also decorated with all kinds of rocks, which gives it a very unique and beautiful effect. When in Pipestone be sure to visit this theatre, and if you are interested, Mr. Feldman will be pleased to show you his garden. It's one of the beauty spots of southwest Minnesota.

Stanley Hull, who operates the Happy Hour theatre at Jasper, has a wonderful memory. He says we called on him six years ago during the hard winter right when he was building a fire to try and warm up his house. Can you imagine a memory like that? The Wardens always remember us when we come back, but we didn't suppose a theatreman's memory was so good.

Stanley says he is still collecting funds for the producers and he thinks he will add another program each week in order to hold his job.

Mitchell, S. D.

We spent Decoration Day at Sioux Falls. Sherm Fitch, manager for RKO, took us out to the golf course and beat the tar out of us. There's no doggone sense in a man acting like that. He is to meet us at Big Stone Lake this week-end to go fishing with us, and when we get him out on that lake, and if he doesn't apologize, we are going to push him out of the boat. Sherm came from Omaha, Neb., and he thinks he can treat the Nebraska folks as he pleases, but he'll find out, by gosh.

J. A. Bradley, manager for a theatre equipment company at Sioux Falls, used to sell us service out of Omaha, and he's one salesman we never had a desire to shoot. He said he had been struggling along for years trying to do without the HERALD, but he found it was no use, so now he is a member of that great family of well informed people.

M. L. Marshall of the Strand theatre at Broadwater directs the movement of the trains on the Milwaukee railroad during his wakeful hours and his wife says he slumbers during the showing of the pictures at the Strand. It doesn't matter to us whether he slumbers or snores: he's a swell fellow and we don't intend to miss him should we ever visit South Dakota again.

The Mitchell Theatre Company is soon to open a swell theatre here in Mitchell. Mr. Logan and Son are to have the management of the house and Mr. Logan, Jr., told us that he got the most of his ideas for the house from the Better Theatres Section of the HERALD. When completed this theatre will be something Mitchell can point to with pride. They expect to have the house ready to open about July 1. We suggested that they get Universal's "Be Mine Tonight" as their opening attraction and Mrs. Logan laughed and said that was just what they had done. Mr. Logan, Jr., promised to send a photo of the interior and exterior of the theatre to the HERALD.

Mr. Burr W. Cline manages the Paramount and Mr. E. A. Bricker the Lyric here in Mitchell, both Publix houses. Mr. Cline formerly managed a theatre in Mankato, Minn., for Finkelstein & Ruben, but has managed the Paramount here for about three years. He's a very delightful chap to meet.

Mr. Bricker is a showman of long experience. He has been in Mitchell for several years operating theatres and he knows what it's all about. It's a pleasure to meet such operators as they.

L. E. Jorgensen of the Regal theatre at Salem used to operate the Glud theatre at Viborg. This is the theatre we told you about having such a funny name, but the name doesn't have anything on Miller's "Leb" at Cloquet, Minn. Mrs. Jorgensen is the lady who gave us those swell Swedish cakes when we were there two years ago. Yum, Yum, we can taste 'em yet.

Ely & Holliday are a couple of young operators at De Smet. They have had the house for a couple of months and are still far from being discouraged. If there is any amusement money lying around loose in De Smet and vicinity we will bet these boys get their share of it. They have enrolled their names in the HERALD family album and that's assurance of success.

John Hojem of the Rex theatre at Lake Preston says he's a Norseman and proud of it. We would be, too, for these Norwegians are about as fine people as we have. John is the "printer's devil" in the local paper office and sets type during his off hours from the theatre. He's a HERALD fan just like all other newspaper theatre boys.

G. S. Abbott was remodeling and redecorating the Arlington theatre at Arlington when we called. He expects to get the house open about July 1. He also operates the theatre at Esteline. From indications the Arlington will be a real theatre when G. S. gets through with it.

F. J. McCarthy operates both theatres in Brookings. He also has one other theatre closed. He said he wanted us to spell it "McCarthy" because he wanted the public to know he was Irish. We told him we supposed that "McCarthy" was Chinese. F. J. is a golf hound, but he doesn't let that interfere with his theatre duties. Brookings is one of the towns that South Dakota points to with pride, and the State theatre is where Brookings people gather when they want a pleasant evening.

R. L. Chambers of the Majestic theatre at Clear Lake eats up work like a bull pup eats fried liver. There's no job too hard for him. He has been living in fear that we wouldn't call on him and sell him the HERALD, but he's all right now and his wife says she hopes he can now get some sleep.

K. W. Jahnig was building a ventilating shaft in his booth when we dropped in. He had pulled everything off but his undershirt and pants and his tongue was hanging out like a dying calf. We couldn't buy him some 3.2 per cent because South Dakota is still on the wagon. We hope he recovers.

Now we are going over to Ortonville on the Big Stone Lake and get set for that Sherm Fitch; and Abner, what we'll do to him will be plenty.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

Presenting

A-MIKE VOGEL

the new chairman of the Round Table

As the editor of Motion Picture Herald it is my privilege to step into the Club section this week to announce to you the selection of an able and distinguished fellow member to the chairmanship of the organization and the editorship of this all-important department. He is A-Mike Vogel, a showman of diligence and experience and a contributor to these pages.

The coming of Mr. Vogel is rather by Club election, too. The Herald, while engaged in a number of plans for the enlivening of these pages, set about making inquiry for a likely chairman among a considerable number of the Club's more active and prominent members. From them came the nomination of Mr. Vogel, and from them, too, a big vote of approbation when his chairmanship was discussed with them. He is a Round Tabler chosen by Round Tablers, for the Round Table.

Mr. Vogel began his career of showmanship right after the War, in September, 1919, and the first item we find in his biography is mention as assistant manager of Loew's Grand in Atlanta, a city considerably famous for the showmen it has given this industry.

Very presently Mr. Vogel was in full flight on a career of wide experiences and handsome distances, bound for the big time and Broadway and way stations, so the record includes: manager Loew's, Knoxville, in Tennessee; field exploitation for Paramount in Seattle, Portland, St. Louis and Pittsburgh, a specialized fling during the boom day excitement with the Real Estate and Theatre Advertising Agency in Tampa and Sarasota, with incidental operation of a theatre at Oldsmar in Florida, and then to New York to open the first radio talent agency; thence to the general managership of the Imperial Theatres of Pittsburgh, with theatres in Oil City and McKees Rocks, Pennsylvania; then into publicity for the opening of the Paradise by Balaban & Katz in Chicago; next manager of the Park Plaza theatre in New York; after which came a term of service in the Fox organization, starting the Fox Amusement News, a tabloid for promotional circulation in New York, advertising management of the Fox Detroit theatre, the same post with the Academy of Music in New York, and more recently director of press books and national exploitation for Fox films.

A-MIKE VOGEL

Mr. Vogel, it is evident, has been places and has done things. He will continue to go places and do things—now in the Round Table. He now takes the chair, the floor and anything that's loose.

THE GUEST EDITORIAL

"FACTS,—NOT FANCIES"

by ANNA BELL WARD

Director and Assistant General Manager, Phoenix Amusement Co., Lexington, Ky.
One of the Few Women Executives in Show Business

IT seems to us that at the present time the theatres which we have visited are overlooking, or I should say neglecting, the five principal necessities that go to make desirable entertainment and put money in the box office, namely: safety, comfort, cleanliness, and a good show properly advertised.

Neatness, tidiness and cleanliness go hand in hand with comfort. Don't think your patrons do not appreciate your efforts to keep clean and safe the places wherein they seek amusement. A well kept theatre is the best manner in which an exhibitor can advertise his place of business.

Where you find an exhibitor who keeps his house in order, you will find a sign over his doorway which spells success. People like to do business with those who think, talk and look successful. A shabby theatre is like a shabby suit of clothes.

If you are wondering why I am stressing this point, it is because to me it is one of the secrets of successful theatre operation. For example, we have just taken over two deluxe opposition theatres, representing an investment of almost a half million dollars, which for the past three years had been operated by a large chain.

We had to close the theatres to clean them up. In one of the houses there is an air duct, a part of the refrigeration plant, six feet in diameter which runs the length of the theatre, one hundred and twenty-five feet. Under each row of seats there is a ten inch cap or mushroom from which air is distributed. The janitors for the past three years have been sweeping all the debris from the theatre into the "fresh air" tube. We have cleaned out two wagon loads of filth that have been deposited in this manner during the time the theatre was operated by the chain.

And now I believe I made a remark about a good show properly advertised. I have neither time nor space to go into detail about theatre advertising. Not long ago I wrote an article for the Herald that covered this. I will say, however, that one of the fundamentals of a good show being properly advertised is to build your advertisement on truth. A lot of money has been thrown away by the average exhibitor on the wrong kind of advertising. Tell the people what you have and do not misrepresent. Build confidence in your advertisements so that people will have confidence in you. Get away from the old side-show fronts and make your entrance pleasing to the eye with classy up to date and inviting lobby displays. Theatre-going patrons of this day and age have been educated above the low-brow circus style of ballyhoo.

A theatre manager cannot be too particular about watching his sound. Many a good show has been ruined because the sound was too loud or too soft, or too something that it should not have been. It is money well spent to employ one person in the theatre to do nothing except watch sound.

If the exhibitors will pay attention to these essentials, it will not be necessary to become panicky and cut admission prices; run two for ones, double bill, and put on "give away nights." Such ideas do not emanate from the minds of real showmen, but from panicky misfits; quitters and cowards at the best, who cannot stand the gaff.

It won't be long now until many of our so-called great showmen, from whom country exhibitors like myself expected to learn a great deal, will have unintentionally eliminated themselves; anyway, they have one consolation,—the midways and street fairs will soon be open.

We are of the opinion that happy days will come again when the industry gives to itself a new motto: "Let the producers produce, and exhibitors exhibit." And speaking of the producing end of the business—It is time for the producers to get their minds out of the gutter and give us consistently clean pictures. B. F. Keith made fifty million dollars putting on clean entertainment. No picture should be shown that a gentleman would be ashamed to take his mother and sister or best girl to see.

People of today want to laugh; already they have too many political, domestic, crime and melodramatic problems in their lives. There are too many stories of the tense shocker class being brought to the screen today. People go to the show to be entertained instead of being embarrassed.

It would be well for the producers to take a few suggestions from the so-called "sticks" as to what kind of pictures the majority of people want today, and not depend so much upon the limited judgment of a few white-collared desk officials in a New York office building, or some of those one-track minded persons whom they employ out there in Hollwood.

It is too bad that some of the little boys behind the big desks think they know so much. We are wise only when we admit we know nothing. The proof of the pudding is in the eating—Take a look at the picture business today. Which of the men higher up have displayed any wisdom or foresight? There are only a few outstanding men in the industry today. You can count the really brilliant ones on one hand and then have a couple of fingers left—the others are simply running around in circles.

. . . "And what about the economic situation?" some one has asked. . . . May I suggest to the thinking people in this industry of ours that fearlessness, faith and confidence in the future and in oneself are the weapons necessary to successfully combat depression which, in truth, exists only in the mind of those who lack the courage to trust in the Supreme Power for the right solution to the innumerable material problems which man finds it necessary to face not only during depressive times, but at all times since the world began.

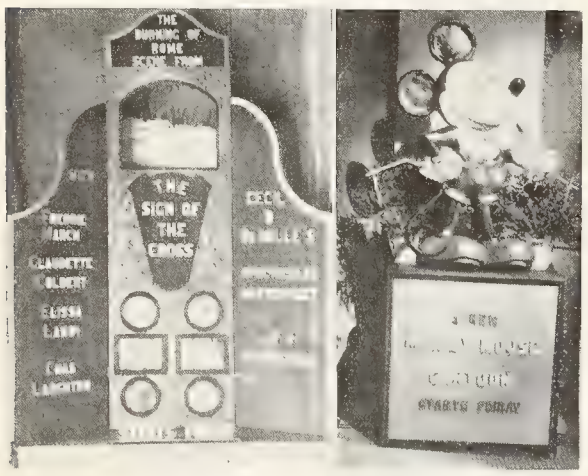
GILMAN HAS HIS OWN LITTLE WORKSHOP IN CELLAR OF THEATRE

Although there is a central art department in the Loew theatre organization in Baltimore to take care of the four company houses there, S. A. Gilman, manager of the Parkway Theatre, has his own little shop in the cellar under his house. He paints all his backgrounds, cuts them out himself and personally supervises other details. Following are a couple of reproductions of work recently turned out by him, together with other descriptive matter concerning several more effective displays he has used the past several weeks.



For "Sign of Cross" a box was given a coast of craftex and holes were cut for star stills and an ordinary fan. Some ribbon, a landscape plus an artistic touch to represent smoke, made them all stop to look at what made a very realistic scene of the Burning of Rome.

The smaller portion of the photo portrays none other than that glorified little rat Mickey Mouse. This was a mechanical contrivance, with the hand moving up and down in a gesture of Howdy to folk as they came in the doors. Maurice Druker, assistant manager of the Parkway and the showman to whom we are indebted for this information, advises us that Mickey had to be tied down to keep the kids from taking him home.

A few other snapshots, which we will attempt to describe instead of reproducing, include displays made for "What! No Beer?", "She Done Him Wrong," "42nd Street," and "King of Jungle."

The familiar bar, brass foot rail and all the other trimmings effectively helped exploit the Keaton-Durante vehicle and the large assortment of hard liquors accentuated the title of "What! No Beer?" On the opposite side of the lobby was a display of old-time beer mugs and steins.

A green velour drop, a futuristic cut-out, green pillars to set off the display, set at the top of stairs craftexed in green and gold, made a very neat little flash for "She Done Him Wrong."

A craftexed box with a landscape of little old New York at the top was used on the display made for "42nd Street." On the left was a three-piece screen effect with star heads; while on the right, was a turntable which revolved with pictures and catchlines.

It's really too bad we cannot reproduce the print showing the display piece painted by Gilman to represent the "King of the Jungle," for you'd think it was Buster Crabbe himself. It shows Crabbe and Frances Dee in a real jungle setting, with grass mats and leaves for added effect.

It is said that Gilman is one of the hardest working theatre managers in the east and after following his activities for some time we can well believe this report. Thanks to Druker for passing the foregoing information along. We'll be looking for more; even a story from busy Manager Gilman himself. Any man that can turn the sort of stuff out that you do, shouldn't keep it a secret, so shoot the dope along.

POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!

This unusually fine art poster of Nancy Carroll is perhaps one of the best ever contributed to our section. It is the work of Paul Andrews, artist for Earle Holden, manager of Keith's Georgia Theatre in Atlanta, Ga. We would like to get more of this fine artist's work for reproduction in this poster art series. We're counting on you, Earle.

"GOLD DIGGERS" OPENS AT NEW YORK STRAND WITH DUE CEREMONY

We figured that sooner or later some smart showman would use it, and sure enough, Charlie Einfeld, aided and abetted by Mort Blumenstock, Eddie Seltzer et al, put over a cellophane lobby as one of an armload of box office bell ringers on the New York Strand Theatre opening of Warners' "Gold Diggers of 1933."

Anticipating a long run of the picture, these never-sleep showmen used acres of cellophane not only to protect the elaborate front from the weather, but also to heighten its richness, which is brought out by the blue and gold neon lights that encircle the entire display.

Over the box office against a gold background were set colored heads of the numerous stars in the picture, and in the center was placed a seven and a half foot figure of one of the beauties playing a white violin encircled with white neon tubing. Animation was secured by hitching the violin bow to a small motor, the movement synchronized with a record playing the song hits of the picture.

The release of a truckload of imprinted gold balloons, 50 containing passes, by Ruby Keeler from a truck in front of the theatre was another highlight, as was the swell street stunt, of a line of costumed girls skating up and down Broadway carrying a large theatre banner. The skate stunt is a smart one, as not only does it tie up with an actual skating scene in the picture but also goes along with the roller craze that has swept New York overnight.

"Father's Day" was not neglected in a tieup with Postal Telegraph, which company used inserts with suggestions from the picture's stars on what type of message to send father. Postal also plugged Joan Blondell in a Florist Telegraph Delivery hookup, giving the picture another strong plug in thousands of florists' windows.

Sound trucks which covered New York and the beaches in advance, music stores plugging the hit numbers, with window cards and streamers, a fan magazine tieup that landed tack cards on hundreds of newsstands, and the distribution of chocolate gold coins bearing theatre imprint were others of the sock stunts that distinguished this well rounded, bang-up campaign which should keep "Gold Diggers" at the Strand for many, many hot weeks.

THE SUMMER THEATRE—A MENACE?

Although countrywide figures are not available, in the East at this writing, at least fifty summer theatres are set for seasons of from eight to twelve weeks. Each week the list grows longer, and it is a poor resort center, indeed, that this year cannot point with pride to a local stage, or what passes for a stage, peopled with actors, many with metropolitan experience and quite a few with Broadway star ratings.

The growth of the summer theatre is startling, if easily explained. Broadway is in the doldrums. The road has folded up, and actors must eat. The resorts hunger for "flesh" at a price, and a summer in the woods or at the beach is not to be sneezed at by the unemployed actor, even though it means little more than bed and board. Obviously, resorts encourage the movement, it means extra entertainment for summer boarders, and more money in the town till.

But what does it mean to you exhibs. in resort centers and neighboring communities? We don't know whether the summer theatre is strong enough to constitute a menace, but the idea is spreading like an ivy rash, and wise showmen are taking steps.

If a summer theatre is set for your town, now is the time to prepare, if you haven't already started firing. A general house brushing-up, booking better pictures, even flesh on your own stage are a few of the things possible.

Keep your house cool and clean, crisp and fresh; give the visitors a better show than they expect; spend a little extra on advertising, and you'll find that the summer theatre that might be the means of attracting new visitors to your community may also help to increase the "take" at your own box office.

EXCELLENT RETURNS ON ADVERTISING GAG F. G. NUTTING USED

Exceptional public interest was taken in an advertising tie-up made a short time ago by F. G. Nutting, manager of the Paramount Theatre at Grand Forks, N. D. It was a guest ticket gag and the large ad was headed: "Who Advertises These Articles For Sale in Today's Herald?" There followed a list of articles advertised in that day's paper. Readers were invited to associate the different articles with names of advertisers by reading through the ads and submit answers for the purpose of participating in awards of guest tickets.

Well over 1,000 replies were received by Nutting when the Club received notice of the above, which was just after the special Publix-Northwest edition went to press and therefore too late to be included with the rest of the material sent in by the men in that division. We're sorry for that, but hope F. G. will continue to keep this department informed on what's doing there.

YES, MURRAY ALPER BUILT BARROOM, TOO; SOME OTHER STUNTS

At the risk of this section being mistaken for a part of a brewery trade journal, owing to the number of barrooms reproduced recently in behalf of exploitation on "What! No Beer?", we are showing in the accompanying photo Murray Alper's idea of what a Williamburg beer emporium should be. Murray manages the Commodore Theatre, Broadway and Rodney streets, Brooklyn, N. Y., and is another one of the hard-working, go-getting Randforce Circuit men often mentioned among Club pages.

Props in the setting included a 12-foot bar; cash register; two cuspidors; two boxes of imitation cigars; 10 beer kegs from a local brewery; whiskey bottles; pretzels in jars; steins and beer glasses; two plaques with catchlines, and sawdust on the floor. Everything was Alperized; or, we should state, secured without cost to the theatre.

Other effective work turned out by Murray the past few weeks included displays on "Mummy" and "Farewell to Arms."

For the former he used an old suit of clothes filled out with paper to resemble a real mummy. A mask was used for the face, ashes were sifted over the "body" to make it look as though it had been dug up from the ground and flasher lights were set behind the eyes. The bottom piece was made up with transparent lighting for title and catchline. On playdate this was set out in front of the theatre and created no little attention.

On the latter named film a picket-wire fence made from 2 x 1 firring strips, bayonets, rifles and other implements of war, were effectively combined to produce a battlefield foreground. All material was secured gratis from the local veterans' post. When exploiting "Kid from Spain" he obtained 10,000 boxes of Vick's cough drops for distribution in pay envelopes, which carried the following copy: "You'll Laugh Yourself Hoarse at Eddie Cantor in the 'Kid from Spain'—To Relieve Your Hoarseness Try Vick's Cough Drops."

Okay, Murray, and we're glad to know that you are still rolling the old ball along for Randforce. Keep up the good work; let us hear from you some more and tell the rest of the gang on your circuit to keep in touch with the Club. Since Monty MacLevy left your outfit some of the boys have been slipping a bit so far as contributions are concerned. Snap them out of it. will you?

BEER BARREL STUNT PROVED TIMELY ONE FOR WALLY CALDWELL

Nationwide publicity prior to the passing by Congress of the new beer bill did not catch Wally Caldwell napping. Wally manages Loew's Valentine out in Toledo, by the way, and patrons were given a close-up of what real beer barrels looked like when "What, No Beer" was due to be shown. The display was arranged in the lobby. A number of wise-cracking labels drew a lot of laughter and helped the stunt along.

Other recent activities of Caldwell's included a fine campaign on "Hallelujah I'm a Bum," which featured the usual extensive merchant tie-ups Wally always manages to put across. He also obtained huge fashion windows in one of the city's largest department stores for Cantor in "Kid From Spain."

HAVE YOU DONE ANY REPAINTING?

During the last few months many a theatre has been given a strong spring tonic in merely the form of paint—in the auditorium, in foyers, in the lobby and out in front. During the summer many more will be similarly redecorated. So frequently the biggest part of a job of reconditioning a theatre lies in applying the right paint in the right places in the right way—and certainly these are times when the theatre business as a whole must make every effort to put every house in tip-top shape.

Now what we want to know from managers and owner-managers who have repainted their theatres, or portions of them, is this:

What were outstanding conditions in your theatre that had to be met in planning your repainting job?

What methods did you adopt in meeting them, such as those applying to kinds of paint, how applied, colors selected, etc.?

Did you find any new methods—little "tricks"—that allowed you to get a better job for less money? What were they?

What were the various costs?

And some of you with a handy camera may have taken a picture of the results. Such pictures would be especially interesting, particularly if you had a picture of the reconditioned portion of your theatre before it was redecorated. At any rate, the interest and helpfulness in such pictures might be borne in mind by those who have a repainting job before them.

So that your write-ups on repainting may be published in time to be of help to all before the regular show season sets in this fall, we urge you to get them in as soon as possible. Plenty of space will be available for them, inasmuch as the pages of both the Round Table Club and Better Theatres will be available. Remember, you don't have to use up a lot of time and words in describing what you did. Just the facts, the kind of facts that will make your experience clear and helpful to all of us. And soon, what?

LOUIS LAMM WAGED EXCELLENT CAMPAIGN ON "PROSPERITY" FILM

Another Club member to cash in on the excellent exploitation possibilities offered by the picture "Prosperity" was Louis Lamm, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Elyria, Ohio, and, incidentally, one of the well known Ohio Lamms.

His campaign was based on "Bring Back Prosperity" and "Buy American-made Goods" and every merchant in his section came through with a co-operative ad and window advertising. Louis arranged to have a Western Union message sent the theatre by Marie Dressler and Polly Moran and then tied-up with the local branch for the printing of enlargements to hang in each merchant's window. Several thousand paper bags of three different sizes were furnished by the merchants and imprinted with a "Prosperity" plug. Heralds with theatre ad on one side and special sale ads of merchants on reverse sides were also given wide distribution. Several stores with considerable frontage on street carried long "Bring Back 'Prosperity'" banners.

We also have a couple of snapshots of a lobby display of rare Chinese and Japanese antiques Lamm used to exploit "Madame Butterfly," but both are too faint to reproduce to advantage. At any rate, the articles were valued at over $500 and when placed in and around a large show-case made a handsome exhibit.

This department again wishes to express indebtedness to the Lamms—both Louis and his brother Julius—over in Cleveland for their co-operation in the matter of making contributions to their fellow Round Tablers. Both are energetic showmen and have sent in many valuable suggestions. We will hope to publish many more from them in the future.

EGAN AND KIDDIES FAMILIAR SIGHT AT PALACE IN CALGARY

Neither the front of the Palace Theatre, Calgary, Canada, or a crowd of kiddies parked around it, is a strange sight in this department, but the accompanying photo will serve to let the many friends of Manager Pete Egan know that he is just as popular with the younger element as ever.

And do they help him sell his shows! Here's a group of "Liberty" carriers, not "On the Way to See" the serial as the banner announces, but actually there. The stunt is just another one of Showman Pete's many methods of focusing public attention on the Palace.

Another photo tells another story, but we'll not attempt a reproduction of the print on account of its proportions. When "Bitter Tea" played his house Pete had made a very attractive front of large cutouts and stills on beaverboard panels, all of which turned out to be an eye-arresting display and a boost to the box office. Japanese lanterns hung along the marquee also enhanced the general scheme.

More about Regional Chairman Egan in forthcoming issues, including the Guest Editorial which he recently submitted. He has been a consistent contributor to this department for a long time and his suggestions are always appreciated by his fellow Round Tablers. How about that photo, Pete? We're still waiting.

ERNIE PETCH SOLD 4-PAGE CO-OP THAT WAS REAL KNOCKOUT

Back only a few weeks at his old stamping grounds at the Metropolitan Theatre, Regina, Sask, Canada, Ernie Petch, manager worked up a four page cooperative section in a local newspaper that was a corker from every angle.

The deal was handled give-away fashion with many articles contributed by many merchants. However, instead of staging the give-away at the theatre it was necessary for patrons to attend the theatre and then go to the different stores to ascertain whether or not they were participants in awards. Catch on? This is as far as we can go without offending good old Uncle Samuel. But aside from that angle, the co-op is one of the best we've come across in many a moon and certainly reflects exceptional promotional ability on the part of Petch.

The above deal was made in connection with "They Just Had To Get Married" and the gag was that merchants were donating the gifts for the couple's trousseau. We sincerely believe Ernie will supply additional details to any Club member who hasn't caught the general scheme of things.

Club Index from May 6th to June 10th

Herewith we list the many items of exploitation, etc., which appeared on the Club pages. By keeping this issue close at hand you can refer to it whenever necessary as a means of locating some particular form of show-selling. We hope our members and readers are finding this service useful. The Club would welcome suggestions to improve it.

QUICK SERVICE IDEAS THAT WORKED

HARRY SUGARMAN, skipper of Grauman's Egyptian, Hollywood, declared his neutrality in politics by obtaining both a G.O.P. elephant and two shaggy donkeys for display in the forecourt of the Egyptian when playing "Gabriel Over the White House." The gag rated him a deep two-column cut and caption in a local paper. . . .

JOHN SCHWALM, manager of the Rialto, Hamilton, Ohio, was in somewhat of a quandary while "Tess of the Storm Country" was playing when patrons started asking "if the Roosevelt picture would be shown later." The mystery was solved when one of the inquirers called attention to a theatre sign reading: "Starting Sunday—A New Deal—Admission 10 and 15 Cents." . . .

HOWARD WAUGH, manager of the Warner Theatre, Memphis, Tenn., and often referred to as "Old Maestro" and "Doctor Penetro," etc., etc., took advantage of the Cotton Carnival which draws thousands to his town every year as an occasion to set up a special advance display for "Gold Diggers." Cut-out stars were made for each of the twelve stars in the picture and rotated constantly on attachments placed on the front of the theatre building. Mirrors were glued on each star, on which Howard flashed a battery of floodlights every evening. A siren was also used at intervals as an attractor. . . .

BILL HART, manager of the Park Theatre, Tampa, Fla., now has 3,500 members in a flourishing Mickey Mouse Club, and recently glorified the occasion with a grand parade. Prominent city officials were on hand and much favorable theatre publicity resulted. . . .

ED. HART, go-getting manager of Walter Reade houses over in Plainfield, N. J., is getting nice publicity breaks through that glorious old institution the Classified Ad Tie-up. Front page and otherwise of his local sheet announced that courtesy tickets will be given to patrons bearing names printed each week day, except Saturdays and legal holidays, among classified ads. It is interesting to note that titles and stars are mentioned in all announcements.

AL GRASGRIN, manager of the Butler Theatre, Butler, Pa., arranged for an airplane to ballyhoo "Central Airport" from the air, with advertising spiel coming from a 20-watt output transmitter amplifier attached to the plane. It cost him only $2.00 to have the machine circle the county for one hour and thirty minutes, the expense being limited to transportation of amplifiers and speaker units to the field. Al is quite a promoter. . . .

MICKEY MOUSE ABROAD!

Not long ago we advised readers that Mickey Mouse had invaded the Orient and now we're backing up that statement with a photo showing a group of club officers in the lobby of the Marlborough Theatre, Singapore. More than 200 children started an association which has since grown to over 500 members. As in the case of American Mickey Mouse Clubs, the youngsters meet every Saturday morning at the theatre to enjoy a special show, of which a Mickey Mouse cartoon is the feature attraction.

ANNA BELL WARD, director and assistant general manager of the Phoenix Amusement Company, Lexington, Ky., is adding to her fame as a publicity purveyor de luxe in the Blue Grass region with her byline on "Has She a Soul," now appearing in serial form in the Lexington Herald. Her talents also include swimming records, singing and acting.

F. M. KENDALL, in charge of the Kentucky Theatre, Danville, Ky., received a swell publicity break when he planted the newspaper serialization of "Gold Diggers" in a local paper. Not only did he get a two-column teaser ad on the front page advising readers to watch for the story, but the title appeared in all trade-marked lettering in all Warner advertising material. Combined with his teaser ad campaign, it made a fine plug. . . .

BILL KEYES, owner of the Victory, Dayton, Ohio, effectively ran a publicity yarn in paid space alongside his regular theatre ad. The story dealt with his newly installed sound range, his manager's hearty endorsement of the current feature and a few facts about accompanying shorts. The story was signed by J. Elmer Redelle, manager. Regular ad was a three-column mat from the press book, over which was run a four-column theatre name slug with publicity yarn running under the head to make the entire ad four columns wide. . . .

A. LEVENTHAL, formerly in charge of the City Line and now manager of the Luxor Theatre, a nabe in Brooklyn, N. Y., took a shot at first run ballyhoo by asking on a page of a recent program: "What Is a So-Called First Run?" He then went on to define the first run as only a privilege to see a picture before others had the opportunity; stated that films were often shown all over the States before reaching Broadway; deplored the spreading of rumors that films were cut to pieces when playing neighborhoods and told 'em that "Until You Have Seen a Picture It's First Run." All of which seems like quite a plug for the subsequents, don't you think? . . .

H. DOUGLAS CARPENTER, who recently elevated himself from the post of assistant manager to managership of the Elks Theatre, Middletown, Pa., gave patrons their first glimpse of what a Midnite Show is like since New Year's Eve when he played "Kid from Spain." He plastered the town with big window cards; used plenty of photos in connection with a number of merchant tie-ups; used a trailer reading: "After Hearing Eddie on the Radio Sunday Don't Forget To See Him at Our Midnite Show" and soon had a lot of folk taking Eddie Cantor. There will be more Midnites later, states Doug. . . .

GEORGE BAKER, who is always pulling the unusual in exploitation at the Newman, Kansas City, recently staged a 6:00 A.M. breakfast for female employees of downtown stores and offices in connection with a special screening of "Temple Drake". Bacon and eggs were provided gratis by a local bakery. Over 2,000 women attended the show, which was over at 8:00 A.M. and in time to punch the clock. . . .

JULES CURLEY, advertising and exploitation man for Warner theatres in New Jersey, is reported giving Jerseyites a new slant on George Arliss. In all his ads on "Working Man" Jules told 'em that George goes in for slang and wisecracks for the first time in any picture and that his favorite expression is "baloney." . . .

JACK GROSS, in charge of RKO Orpheum, Minneapolis, knows the value of downtown news stands as publicity mediums. He recently effected a tie-up which is netting the Orpheum plenty of advertising on boards on all loop stands. . . .

GEORGE BAKER, manager of the Publix-Newman, Kansas City, has been cooperating with his local Chamber of Commerce in a "Know Your Kansas City" campaign. He showed films of local industries and, at the same time, displayed company products on the mezzanine. . . .

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Come on boys, it won't be long now and the dog days will be on us. Are you preparing for them?

HOLMES PROVED THAT CO-OPS CAN BE SOLD IN SMALL COMMUNITY

Although recent reports from the field indicate that it's getting tougher and tougher to go out among merchants and promote single and double truck cooperative advertising, R. E. Holmes, manager of the Bellevue Theatre, Upper Montclair, N. J., believes much resistance can be overcome by first doing the proper ground-work. We have before us a corking full page he worked up on "Prosperity" as evidence of his claim that it is still possible to promote this type of ad, even in the smaller communities.

His first step was to contact the local Business Men's Association, of which he is a member for reasons good and sound, and propose a Prosperity Campaign for the entire town. Obtaining the association's sanction of the idea, his next step concerned the hanging of burgees in front of every business place in Upper Montclair. The burgees read: "Prosperity Street—Shop Here." Across the main street a large banner carried the following copy: "Marie Dressler and Polly Moran in Prosperity—Now Showing at the Bellevue." Holmes then contacted the local bank and sold authorities on plastering the interior of the building with copy reading: "Don't Hoard Your Money at Home—Put It in the Bank and Let It Work For You—This Is the Advice of Marie Dressler, Who Is Now Co-starring With Polly Moran in Prosperity—Now Showing at the Bellevue."

Then came the job of selling the full page ad. Most of the merchants handed Holmes the same old line—that business was too tough and that they didn't think they'd be able to lend their cooperation. He then reminded them that the Business Men's Association was back of the move 100% and finally secured their names on the dotted line.

Since the picture was booked over the holiday season the following trailer was run on the screen: "City Crowds Are Uncomfortable; City Trips Are Expensive; Time Is Valuable; Give Gifts From Upper Montclair; Here You May Choose Wisely." The trailer was, of course, paid for by the business establishments. Twenty merchants also contributed to the revenue by clubbing together to pay for the privilege of having their firm's name painted in gold letters with Xmas background.

To sum it all up, the merchants were entirely satisfied and the theatre hung up a thoroughly satisfactory record for the engagement, due, without a doubt, to Holmes' method of handling the campaign.

Since working in Upper Montclair he has changed his mind about the theory that pictures can't be sold in a big way in a small town and intends to proceed as far as possible along re-vamped lines in the future. And we're here to state that if Harry Starn (his supervisor—and whose work we've had the pleasure of watching for some time) has anything to do with it, we know he'll keep up the good work. Give Harry our best regards and ask him to report to his Club when he can find time, Holmes, and here's wishing you continued success.

Warner in Newspaper Tieup on Jones Shorts

Warner Brothers, releasing the Vitaphone short subject series starring Bobby Jones, famous golf player, has arranged a tieup on the group whereby the New York Sun, on 10 consecutive Saturdays, is publishing a full page of photographs illustrating the various phases of the game in conjunction with the series of articles by Jones, "My Theories of Golf." Credit is given the Warner series of films.

Similar pages are appearing in numerous newspapers featuring the Jones syndicated articles.

Columbia Plans New Aid To Exhibitors on Films

With the coming release of Columbia's "What Price Innocence," the company will offer to the exhibitor suggestions for a complete advertising and exploitation campaign. The suggested campaign, according to the plan, will have had practical test in varying communities. The picture has been submitted to representative audiences among educators, the clergy, parent-teacher and similar organizations to ascertain reactions.

The Columbia current year book has been adopted by the faculty of Harren High School, New York, as a text book for students of advertising, with special reference to illustration and lettering. Mike Newman has joined Columbia, under George Brown, director of advertising and publicity, to handle exploitation for the western division, with headquarters in Los Angeles, replacing Murray Pennock, resigned.

Heads Embassy Pictures

George P. Quigley has been elected president of the Embassy Pictures Corporation, and Edward B. Ginsburg has been named secretary-treasurer. A program of shorts is set for release during the new season.

Trailer with Trick Series

Supreme Showmen's Service is providing a trailer with a series of magic tricks for campaigns to draw children's attendance.

ST. LOUIS MAYOR UNIQUELY HONORED

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of St. Louis, headed by Fred Wehrenberg, has presented to Mayor Bernard F. Dickman a unique gift, in the form of 500 feet of motion picture film taken on the occasion of his inauguration. City Comptroller Louis Nolte, credited with bringing the city through the financial crisis in good shape, was similarly honored. Both men are understood to be liberal minded and favorably disposed toward the motion picture interests of St. Louis.

Associated Film Distributors Will Handle 77 Features

Seventy-seven features, 18 of them westerns, and two novelties and 51 short subjects, will be handled by Associated Film Distributors, independent exchange organized recently in Kansas City by Russell C. Borg. Not all of these are now available.

Included in the features are 37 from Tiffany, 12 Chesterfield and Invincible and 10 Pathe reissues. The westerns are 10 Ken Maynards and eight Bob Steeles. Eighteen two-reelers and 33 one-reelers comprise the shorts.

Equipment Firm Reports Loss

The Sentry Safety Control Corporation, manufacturers of a device for motion picture projectors, reported a net loss for 1932, after taxes, depreciation and other deductions, of $133,918, which compares with a net loss of $4,303 in 1931.

Monogram MPPDA Decision Due

Monogram Pictures Corporation's executive committee will meet late this week to decide the company's position on joining the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

Gerhard to Radio City; Finney Takes U.A. Post

George Gerhard, in charge of United Artists publicity for two years, has resigned to handle publicity at the Radio City Music Hall in New York, succeeding Terry Turner. Edward Finney has replaced Mr. Gerhard in charge of publicity, under Hal Horne, advertising and publicity head. Mr. Turner has been temporarily transferred to the RKO theatre division, according to Robert F. Sisk, RKO advertising and publicity director.

Following numerous additions to the publicity and advertising staff of United Artists within the past two weeks, Howard LeSieur, former account executive for Hanff-Metzger, advertising agency, has been named production manager. Charles Leonard has been brought to the home office from San Francisco to be advertising manager.

Cullman Continued as Roxy Operating Receiver

Howard S. Cullman, operating receiver for the original Roxy theatre in New York, was retained for another six months this week by Judge Francis G. Caffey in United States district court. Mr. Cullman's first half-year term expired Tuesday, and the creditors, meeting in Judge Caffey's office, expressed their approval of the receiver's conduct of the theatre. The present policy of vaudeville and pictures will be continued.

Lawton, Operating Cohan, Plans Additional Houses

Stanley Lawton, operator of the George M. Cohan theatre on Broadway at popular prices, plans the acquisition of several other houses on Broadway and elsewhere. Definite announcements are expected shortly. The Cohan, former legitimate house, had been dark for some time when Mr. Lawton took it over. Mr. Lawton was former general managing director in charge of theatre operation for the Keith-Albee circuit.

TECHNOLOGICAL

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 177.—(A) What is the composition of a fuse wire? (B) Just in what way do fuses act in protection of electrical apparatus and wires? (C) Why do some cities permit the use of link fuses and, in fact, insist upon their use in theatre projection rooms? (D) Where link fuses are used in a projection room, how should they be installed? What types of fuses is the projectionist likely to be called upon to use in his work?

Answer to Question No. 170

Bluebook School question No. 170 was: (A) Give us your idea of the best method for storage of film while in the projection room. (B) While moistening dry film does not ordinarily come within the scope of a projectionist's duties, yet tell us how it is done. (C) What damage is film subject to if too dry, as compared with properly moistened film?

The following answered acceptably: C. Rau and S. Evans, G. E. Doe, T. Van Vaulkenburg, J. Wentworth, Dale Danielson, H. Edwards, E. E. Parkinson, W. Ostrum, H. B. Coates, D. Goldberg and L. Hutch, B. Diglah and P. Jackson, S. Maybe and R. D. Konley; D. Emmerson, R. D. Oberleigh, T. Lambert and T. Divis; L. H. Simmons, D. I. Bancroft, P. L. Day and P. L. Daniels; D. Anderson, H. Rogers, L. Summers and D. M. Banks; L. S. Zaren, B. I. Fanchann, T. R. Bancroft, D. L. McCarthy, H. R. Beldwin and G. K. Berger; D. L. Sinklow, H. Pilson and D. L. Daniels; P. L. Jensen and A. Ilks, L. Grant and P. T. Zann, J. F. and O. L. Evans; H. True, L. Hendershot, L. F. Thomas, D. R. Gilbert, T. O. Wilde and N. S. Watkins; T. M. Vinson and D. K. Ormie, D. Michelson, F. Hanson, J. L. Hanson, H. Harrison and E. Hralor; L. M. Croft, L. Thomas and D. D. Davis; L. G. Howe, M. Spencer and D. T. Arlen; E. W. Warner, B. L. Timlinson and T. G. Raynor; G. Farmann, Bill Doe, T. Taylor and C. Ray; D. T. Arlen and M. Spencer; O. Allbright, R. Wheeler and R. Suler; O. L. Daris and M. Simms; J. C. Peters, B. L. Blinkendorfer and O. L. Blachley; R. Gedcings and P. L. Danby; L. Jones, B. L. and C. F. Banning; D. L. Mason and J. T. Ballinger; T. L. Raybomd, B. T. Miller and D. Meills; L. Jones and B. L. Banning, L. Lorient and E. L. Gibbs, T. R. Thompson and A. K. Moss.

I believe that while there are many excellent answers to Section A, that of L. Hutch and D. Goldberg suits the needs of publication best. These gentlemen say:

"In the process of projection, film is submitted to heat of high degree. It therefore is essential to good practice that when not in use it be not only stored in as cool a place as is practicable, but also that the air in the storage chamber be kept at least reasonably moist. It also is an essential to safety to audiences that not only shall the storage reservoir be thoroughly fireproof, but also that each reel of film be kept in a compartment wholly separated from every other reel compartment, but also that each such compartment be connected directly with the open air outside the theatre, to the end that smoke and gasses generated (should a fire occur) be carried not only outside the projection room, but also outside the building. This greatly reduces the danger of audience being alarmed, as they will be if smoke seeps out from the projection room at every possible point.

"In addition to all of which the film storage reservoir must be constructed with rolled seams, since solder would melt and permit the whole thing to fall to pieces were it relied upon to hold the reservoir together under the condition of high temperature generated by burning film.

"Summing up: Film should be stored (a) in as cool a place as is available; (b) in one-reel compartments with rolled or riveted seams, each compartment connected with open air outside the theatre and, if possible, above its roof; (c) each compartment should have under it a receptacle for water, with a float so arranged that when the water level drops too low a spot of red will be disclosed as warning; (d) each one-reel compartment must be so arranged that the weight of a reel, or any part thereof, will automatically close the compartment door; (e) such storage reservoir should, where practicable, be built into the projection room wall with its face flush with the surface thereof; (f) such cabinet may well, under suitable conditions, have a double front, one in the projection room for removal of reels, and one in the rewinding room for their insertion after rewinding is finished."

(B) We will now listen to Rau and Evans on Section B. Many I have given credit to in the listing this week did not do any too well on this one, but, after all, it is not exactly a practical projection problem, so I forgave them and included their names. Evans and Rau say:

"The projectionist may moisten dry film by unwinding the film into a large can in the bottom of which is water and a wire screen which prevents the film from coming into actual contact with the water. The film is allowed to absorb the moisture until it is in satisfactory condition, when it is taken from the can and allowed to dry out slightly; that is, until removal of excess dampness which might have a tendency to make the emulsion sticky before being wound on a reel. Also, a glycerine and water bath may be given the film by immersing the film in a solution of 30 parts of water to one part of glycerine. The immersion should be only for a very short period. The difficulty usually encountered is getting an even distribution of moisture over the entire surface of the film. If the distribution is uneven, blisters will raise on parts of the emulsion when the film dries. To satisfactorily dry the film after the immersion, a large drum is almost a necessity. Even 50 feet of film cannot be handled otherwise without danger of warping the film."

Dale Danielson says, concerning section C:

"Film that is too dry is very brittle; also, it is relatively noisy during projection and subject to danger of breakage at sharp bends or under the strain incidental to loosening a loop. It is more difficult, not to say impossible, to make as good a splice with very dry film as with film in proper condition as to moisture. In passing through the projector any of the several possibilities of damage would be aggravated if the film be very dry."

D. Emmerson answers thus:

"Dry film loses much of its flexibility, therefore is brittle and easily fractured by any bending strain. Very dry film is more susceptible to almost any kind of damage than is moist, flexible, tough film. Moist film is tough. Dry film is not, and in a way that is a very good answer to the whole question."

WHEN you use that phrase, the chances are your picture was made on Eastman Super-sensitive Panchromatic Negative ... with the ingenious gray backing to give it that extra ounce of brilliance ... that pleasing anti-glare effect ... Mr. Wm. F. Gordon, Branch Manager
Warner Bros. Pictures
Salt Lake City, Utah

Dear Mr. Gordon:

Just a word before I leave for Chicago. We are on the third day of the "GOLD DIGGERS OF 1933", and I want to tell you it's the greatest box office attraction of all time. We are breaking every record for attendance. It's breaking the old "Gold Diggers" record, and making "42ND STREET" look like "30 cents".

It's a great picture, and people are coming back the second night to see it over, just like they did on the old "Gold Diggers of Broadway". I don't know where the people come from, but they are here.

Thank you for giving us this picture now.

Yours very truly,

THAT OTHER CODE

NOW for some months the tide of demand for external supervision of the moral content of the motion picture as delivered to the public screen has been rising. There are many evidences that the movement has not reached its crest, and there are considerable possibilities that politically controlled censorships, state and/or federal, will prove to be considerably more of an impending menace than ever before.

While it is not quite admitted in the public press, and not quite recognized in general conversation, it is none the less true, amazingly true, that this nation is undergoing something so closely akin to a revolution that an unbiased observer from another world would scarcely be able to discern the difference.

The industry is just now being given the exceedingly delicate and interesting opportunity to establish its own code of commercial conduct under the National Recovery Act. There is apparently an adequate understanding that something has really to be done about that. There will be a code and most likely it will be enforced.

In the spring of 1930 the industry, or rather the producers, adopted or professed to adopt a code pertaining to the standards of morals to be supported, observed and followed in the product destined for the screen. The ensuing effect upon the character, tone and aroma of the product has not been apparent to any observer, lay or professional.

The evasions and floutings of the code have been conspicuous and notorious. And not, it would seem, looking over the financial statements, to any marked profit to any of the evaders and flouters, even in transient earnings.

Meanwhile it has been necessary for Mr. Will Hays to send sundry pictures back to Hollywood for purification, and his office assistants and various bureaus have been and are in constant, if suppressed, turmoil with the Hollywood factotums over issues of decency which would never be issued if decency were the real intent of the picture purveyors concerned. The public press weekly becomes more emphatic in its editorials and its quotations of unfriendly critics of the pictures. Agitators seeking causes to espouse find again opportunity beckoning in the films. Month after month the exhibitor expressions of the trade press, where they find voice, as outstandingly in Motion Picture Herald's "What the Picture Did for Me" department and in many a letter and interview, give evidence that the great big American public and the box office would care for a New Deal in production and pictures that are attuned to average American life and its standards.

Since we are, after all, having a quiet little homegrown revolution in which an outspoken majority is engaged in getting some part of what it asked for, by process of law and new law, it would seem a course of some discretion to see if that Production Code might be made effective in practice before something else is made into law.

TO TELL THE CONSUMERS

A SPECIAL INTEREST as well as fitness attaches to the announcement by Mr. Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, of the formation of a public relations bureau with Mr. Fred Meyer of Wisconsin as chairman. The announcement carries with it an outline of what promises to be a constructive publicity policy addressed to the consuming public. This assumes particular importance in that the public has never been made aware of the existence of the exhibitor as an organized entity and factor in the industry. The public knows there are studios in Hollywood, that there is a "Hays office" in New York, and, perhaps it has heard of some of the "home offices" on Broadway, but it does not know that there is a community of interest and cooperative understanding in organizations including and representing important groupings of the ten thousand odd exhibitors which deliver that studio product on the local screens. It will help to improve the status of the motion picture theatre to make the consumer see the theatre not only as a local institution but also as a component of a national organization of importance. Mr. Meyer is a fortunate choice for the post.

SMARTER OUT WEST

THE scientific researchers have been at it again in a new sector. This time the American Eugenic Society gets a report from Mr. Frederick Osborn of the Galton Society evaluating the relative intelligence of the various States. We find on the scale, to our amazement, not to say alarm, that Washington is first with a rating of 9.03, California, including Hollywood, second with 8.92 and New York, the proud Empire State, way down in thirteenth place with 3.51, and Indiana, famed for its politicians and novelists, rated at –.25. Of course, the data were assembled long since Mr. Will Hays, Mr. Charles Pettijohn and Mr. Maurice McKenzie left the state. And that reminds us that Connecticut, wherein reside so many members of the staff of Motion Picture Herald, is way up in fifth position with a rating of 7.53.

ALMOST able American stateman once declared for "open covenants, openly arrived at." Now that the Government is making this business its business, which means the public's business, it would seem most apparent that endeavors at secrecy in any phase of the formation of the operating code under the Recovery Act could be taken as reflecting chicane and selfish purpose bound ultimately to be exposed. Believe it or not, this industry is sitting in Macy's window now.

REFUTATION

To gossip mongers, prognosticating jitters in Paramount Productions, Inc. (producing subsidiary) personnel, last weekend from Hollywood veteran Adolph Zukor gave sharp refutation, praised Emanuel Cohen's current regime. "Ridiculous," Mr. Zukor characterized reorganization rumors, declaring Paramount "extremely well satisfied with the present producing organization. Pictures made under Mr. Cohen's supervision have revived the prestige of Paramount quality." Ample funds has Producer Cohen for his program, added Executive Zukor, giving the direct lie to scandaleers thus: "Emanuel Cohen is the production head . . . and will so remain. I hope no heed will be paid to future rumors of impending shakeups as such reports are not only untrue but may be construed as insidious attempts to hurt the morale of the organization." . . .

EXHIBITOR VICTORY

To outside competition, Madison, Wis., exhibitors last week dealt a sharp midriff blow, via an ordinance sponsored in, hustled through the common council, placing firm tabu on tent shows, other than circuses, in the city. Specifically, no performances are to be permitted in buildings or other structures which do not comply with the city's theatre building restrictions. To Exhibitors F. J. McWilliams, John Scharnberg, Arthur P. Desmoreaux, Hugh Flannery goes credit for the move, thanks of fellow exhibitors. . . .

PURCHASED FREEDOM

To wealth's possessors has come in recent months a new specter, the hand of the kidnaper, who, by his tactics, leaves police helpless, relatives desperate. Latest victim was 39-year-old brewer, William Hamm, Jr., part heir to $4,000,000, last week in St. Paul, Minn. Among divers financial, business interests, Mr. Hamm is receiver for Publix Theatres subsidiary, Minnesota Amusement Company. This week to his home was victim Hamm returned, his family minus "at least $100,000," dutifully paid to his captors, no questions asked. . . .

BUDDING CIRCUIT

Quietly into action last week swung a new theatre circuit, in development for several months past, aiming apparently at no dashing, grabbing rush of acquisition, but rather a slow process of expansion, from a nucleus of perhaps 10 Midwest towns as the first year's mark. Into the name Chatfeld Theatres (thought soon to be changed) has gone those of its chief sponsors: David J. Chatkin, Milton H. Feld, pre-receivership Publix Theatres executives. Also once of Publix and a Chatfeld official is Harry Katz, brother of famed Sam, Publix organizer. Claimed is no official connection between Chatfeld and Sam Katz's budding producing company, current decentralization depletion of producer-affiliated circuits forming perhaps the leaf from the history book of depression film activities, which leads Chatfeld to continue a free agent on the one hand, to move cautiously on the other. . . .

GOLDEN-VOICED CANTOR

To Jerusalem, lode-star of all orthodox Jewry, recently traveled Josef Rosenblatt, of whose far-famed tenor the late great Enrico Caruso once said: "a voice of pure gold." On Sunday the 51-year-old cantor completed the final scenes of a starring motion picture, for the American-Palestine Fox Film Company, concerned with the Wailing Wall, the Dead Sea and the River Jordan. Monday came the swift stroke of a heart attack, and the death of Cantor Rosenblatt. In films and on the concert stage the golden-voiced cantor sang, but never at the sacrifice of his orthodox practices and beliefs. Legally unaccountable, he has, nevertheless, since 1925, striven to pay creditors of a defunct Jewish weekly paper in which he had been entangled, signed notes. Two years ago he had already paid off $80,000 of $150,000 which, according to law, he never owed. . . .

SOTTO-VOCE

Seeping through the backwash of Toronto motion picture circles is a softly-told reason why local police recently raided the offices of the IATSE operators' local, seized books, records, signs carried by union pickets before various local theatres. Via grapevine, the reason: police bigwigs were considerably warm under the collar when W. P. Covert, union business agent, stood before the Toronto Trades and Labor Council, insisted the recent arrest of Lew Kendall, operator (fined, imprisoned), for stench bombing the Cum Bac theatre, was a "frame-up." Then came the raid, say the whisperers. . . .

UNION TRIUMPH

Seemingly interminable is the legal activity of New York projectionists' union, Local 306. Last week to it went an important judicial decision when a unanimous appellate division verdict reversed a lower (supreme) court decision, granted the union a temporary injunction restraining a wage cut below union scale. Enjoined were Walter Reade, Jerome Rosenberg, Rose-Reade, Inc., in whose Savoy theatre operator wages were recently pared below union contract figures. A local magistrate upheld the union in its immediate court action; the theatre replaced 306 with Empire union men; supreme court injunction proceedings scored for the Savoy owners; then the appellate division decision. . . .

FAIR NAME

Touchy, extremely careful are authorities of South America, particularly Mexico, where the fair name, good repute of their continent is concerned. Chief offenders, oftentimes, are motion pictures. Last week in Mexico City, authorities exercised their prerogative, banned the American film, "Laughing at Life," from exhibition in Mexico. Reason: the film was considered degrading to South America. . . .

RESEARCH ECHOES

Echoes of the recent controversy-inspiring report of the Motion Picture Research Council on children and the motion picture last week came bounding back from Ohio State University's Board of Educational Research in the person of Dr. W. W. Charters, closely concerned with the research which resulted in the report. Planned by Dr. Charters, envisioned as revolutionizing the motion picture of tomorrow, via that inevitable "child of today is the patron of tomorrow," is a course for use in high and junior high schools for educating children in the art and appreciation of the motion picture. The visionary result: the coming generation will support good pictures, deny bad. Again the vital question: What is good, what bad motion picture. . . .

EXHIBITION AND DISTRIBUTION CODES DRAFTED IN PRELIMINARY FORM

Distributors Approve Clauses on Violations of Production Code, Gratuities, Breach of Contract and Overbuying

[Texts of the first tentative codes of the exhibitors and distributors are printed, respectively, on page 15 and 22. These are first drafts and have been widely distributed in the industry among representatives of leading associations and are subject to many changes.]

With the drawing up of tentative first drafts of exhibition and distribution codes this week the motion picture industry has taken two definite and concise steps forward toward a code covering all branches.

Coordinators, formed as committees representing production, distribution and exhibition, have been hard at work for ten days seeking complete cooperation from these branches in order to establish an industry code in accordance with President Roosevelt's Industrial Recovery law. Meetings have been held daily at the offices of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, with producer, distributor and exhibitor representatives sitting in.

The Tentative Exhibition Code

The tentative exhibition code covers everything from the playing of pictures which are in violation of the production code to score charges, and includes, specifically, the following subjects: fair clearance (protection), uniform clearance schedules, maximum clearance, offers of gratuity to distributors, inducements to breach contracts, overbuying, selective contracts, admission prices, double-featuring, box office statements, transfer to avoid contracts, unauthorized exhibition, midnight showings, unauthorized showings, switching, bicycling, duping, abetting unauthorized exhibitions, late returns, hold-overs, liability on circuit shipments, percentage pictures, block booking, arbitration, cut rate competition, tying-in of shorts with features, playing arrangements, non-theatrical competition, exclusives, commercial advertising in pictures, substitutions, threats and intimidation, re-issues, foreign pictures and sales policies.

Distributors are said to have approved the stand on pictures in violation of the production code, gratuities, inducement to breach of contracts, overbuying and selective contracts.

The tentative exhibition code was drafted by the executive committee of the MPTOA, headed by Ed Kuykendall and M. E. Comerford. Copies of the code are being sent out to affiliates of the MPTOA with invitation to make comments and suggestions for inclusion in final drafts.

The Tentative Distribution Code

The tentative distribution code, drawn up by sales head members of the MPPDA, includes such provisions as pictures in violation of the production code, foreign pictures violating the code, appeals against bans on pictures in violation of the code, advertising, purposes of the film boards of trade, standard license agreement, arbitration, credit bureaus, clearance, maximum clearance, avoidance of breaches of clearance and zoning schedules, distributor agreements permitted, arbitration of disputes re unfair competition, distributor agreements prohibited, unfair sales methods, gratuities, offers to distributors' employees, misappropriation of advertising values, unfair condition of contract, feature pictures without shorts, coercion of exhibitors, exclusion of pictures when licensed in groups, fire prevention, re-issues, and changes in announced terms of sales. The exhibition interests are said to have placed their stamp of approval on the first four.

The production code is now being discussed by directors of the MPPDA.

At the conclusion of an all-day session Tuesday the Academy board decided to appoint a committee of 10 from each creative branch of the industry to work out their own code. In a wire to Will H. Hays the board officially notified him of their intention to "protect their own interests" through the organization of the committees. Mr. Hays replied that "it of course is contemplated that every group shall have every opportunity to participate in the consideration of different elements of the code." Mr. Hays arrives in Hollywood late next week.

While distributor members of the MPPDA now operate under a virtual code of regulations, suggestions by independent distributors are being considered. The principal independent distributor units are the Progressive MPPDA, headed by Tobias A. Keppler, and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, headed by P. S. Harrison. The two associations are cooperating in the drawing up of a code for the independent divisions of the industry.

Independents Seek Harmony

Mr. Keppler, a motion picture attorney, said last week that the action of the independents in drawing up their own code should not be misconstrued as being antagonistic to the Hays organization. After a code is agreed upon, he said, it is the independents' intention to get the MPPDA to consent to it so as to avoid any unnecessary conflict and "to aid the industry in working in complete harmony."

Already a committee of members of the NAMPI, headed by P. A. Powers, G. A. Graham and P. S. Harrison, is at work on the outlines for a code and among the subjects to be embodied are:

1. Divorcement of exhibition from production.
2. Elimination of price discrimination of service.
3. Elimination of preference of runs.
4. Elimination of discrimination against and taxation of the motion picture in favor of other forms of amusement including radio.

A meeting late this week will bring the first draft of a proposed code for independents, Mr. Keppler announced.

Describing himself as "amazed" at the speed with which the MPPDA and the MPTOA have been formulating their codes for distribution and exhibition, Sidney Samuelson, president of Allied of New Jersey, said last week that "the Hays organization is driving with a load of dynamite in its car when it doesn't first find out what effect the code will have on exhibition, box-offices, grosses and film rentals."

"Theatre owners should not be implicated to any degree in the drafting of a code until it is determined finally whether the law actually applies to them," he said, "and until the facts are learned as to their ability to meet increased wages and shorter working hours."

Kuykendall Cites Progress

Ed. Kuykendall, MPTOA president, on Tuesday answered this statement and others by saying:

"No matter what ultimate stand Allied may take in this matter a majority sentiment will be accepted by the government," he said.

"The MPTOA is setting up the proper machinery to use every possible, fair method to bring about a standardization of percentage contracts. It is a notorious fact that producers have asserted time and again that certain percentage contracts are national and standardized when, as a matter of fact, contracts have been forced upon small units and single theatre ownerships because of their minority. By the time the new selling season comes around the independently-owned and operated theatres are going to occupy a position that will force recognition of their interests. I want it understood, however, that as the head of the MPTOA

TINKER RESIGNS FROM FOX FILM

Edward R. Tinker, chairman of the board of Fox Film Corporation, resigned Wednesday his chairmanship, his directorship and his membership in the executive committee. His resignation was accepted.

In a letter to the board Mr. Tinker said, "I came to this corporation 18 months ago, not with the intention of making it my life work, but in the hope of assisting it in securing a capable management, and, if possible, of putting it on a firm financial basis. The capable management has been obtained and I believe that the proposed adjustment with the creditors is very fair to the stockholders and that on presentation of the matter to them, they will recognize this fact. As I feel that the purpose for which I became connected with the corporation is accomplished and as I am about to undertake some special work for the Chase National Bank in connection with the reorganization of Fox West Coast Theatres, I feel it is timely and proper to send in my resignation."

RESEARCHERS AND WINDOW DRESSERS

Ride High, Disguised in Scientific Jargon and Bawling Hoarsely at the Films, Says DeCasseres

by BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

Two of the oldest racketeers known to history are Probe and Quiz. It was Probe who first discovered that there were great publicity and a carload of easy jack in investigating something or somebody, preferably something that was prospering and somebody who worked hard. Quiz, his partner in this soft-money game, did the research work.

As time went by, Probe and Quiz, grown immensely prosperous in their snooping and their self-invented jobs, dropped their two short and raw names and consolidated themselves into a research council. This was more dignified and had a kind of highbrow slant. The magic of those two words could yank the jack out of the strong-boxes of the most completely buttoned-up philanthropic zanies that ever blossomed in Boobland.

Add the Word "Scientific"

Now, there was just one word missing in "research council," and after Probe and Quiz had scratched their cunning heads it jumped at them out of the air. That word was scientific. What old hunks or old lady with millions laid aside could resist that word scientific when linked to the words research and council?

Probe and Quiz clearly saw that when Scientific Research Council or Council for Scientific Research (let us say as to the influence of blueberry pie on the sleep of a boy who saw a motion picture an hour after he ate the pie, for instance) was thrust at Big Hidden Money it would move the locks of safes that are rustier than the last Scotch joke you heard.

And so the research racket grew, until today, disguised in scientific jargon or dressed up in Elegant Moral Duds, it rides high, wide and handsome throughout the land, bawling hoarsely about the Dangers That Threaten Our Children, or the Flagrant Public Wickedness of Pictures and the Stage, using precisely the same methods that the Anti-Saloon League used in order to put over Prohibition.

No industry is safe from these experts at the old army game of providing highly remunerative jobs on censorship boards or on research councils, with the work carried on until the old cow, Rich Sponsor, is milked dry.

The technique of the modern research racket is as follows:

Some worthy, but not otherwise employed, rich old man or woman leaves a large amount of money for a foundation or fund to be used for some "educational" or "scientific" purpose—to teach German to parrots, bring the Good News to the perfectly happly and sin-loving folk in Jimbazoo, or to find out the baleful effect of "Strange Interlude" or the Marx Brothers on the mind of a perfectly happy boy or girl.

No sooner has this foundation or fund spread its banquet of jack than the research pointers and setters from the four corners of the country are on the trail. They subdivide and divert the Fund or Foundation into various new activities, all of which, however, are aimed at "exposing" something or somebody in the name of "morality" and "public decency."

A large slice of the fund or foundation is voted the pointers and setters for this "highly meritorious" purpose. There are probably several thousand men and women in the United States at the present time who live perfectly adipose and useless lives on these research rackets.

"Window-Dressers" Added

But these little-known Grand Panjandrums of Research cannot work alone. To interest our Great Statesmen at Washington or in the State capitols, a band of "window-dressers" is necessary for the office stationery.

These Research Window Dressers, who lend their names to every kind of scheme imaginable, are often personally conscientious, serious, self-sacrificing men and women who go into an ecstatic cataleptic trance every time they see their name in print. Most of them never inquire into, or do not care about, the activities of the pointers and setters. They are in a great Scientific or Moral Movement! Hallelujah!

In "window-dressing" stationery, the Big Bosses of the Research Game know the tremendous pulling power of the words University, Educational and Reverend. So upon their committees, councils, advisory boards and letterheads will appear the names of a raft of teachers, university professors, rabbis, parsons, "economists," heads of children's welfare organizations, editors, and soon the whole of "Who's Who in America" is dragged and sieved.

Motion Picture Snooped

The motion picture—which to my way of thinking has done more for mental hygiene, to rouse the imagination, to objectify the human race, to amuse a forlorn humanity, and to raise the level of the people's story-intelligence (than which nothing was lower before the advent of the motion picture) than any other medium of modern times, with the exception of the newspaper—has been pursued and snooped by these racketeering researches. I have seen hundreds of pictures that were inartistic and commonplace; but I have never seen a picture that was "immoral," that I would not take a boy or girl to see* or that I believed would ever excite any one to crime unless the person looking at it were not already a criminal. The cry of "immorality" in the arts and in the amusement world is always raised by someone who is making money out of the use of the word.

I lately had occasion to address by letter the hundred or so sustainers of a film research council. I declared that I believed the activities of such organizations were ulteriorly aimed toward establishment of a federal motion picture censorship, with the sponsors of such movements looking for the fat jobs. Many of the sustainers denied indignantly that the research council contemplated any such move. On the very day, however, that I received some of these answers, William Randolph Hearst, on the strength of a printed report of the "findings" of this council, announced in all of his papers that he was in favor of a federal censorship of motion pictures.

There is very little "moral," "educational" or "scientific" purpose in these research councils. Their motives are political and monetary. Instead, then, of a Congressional investigation into the picture industry, I move that Congress investigate all privately endowed "research" and "investigating" councils, committees and organizations and subpena their window-dressers to find out just how much they know about what they are sponsoring.

*Several of our contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me" department can perhaps inform Mr. DeCasseres of some titles of productions which they do not consider appropriate pabulum for the young.

Mr. Benjamin DeCasseres, only living descendant of the line of Spinoza, famous critic and commentator, who periodically illumines these pages with his pertinent and impertinent observations anent the stage and its wares, got all full of Camembert at a cheese contest at Bloomingdales last week and came forth with a screed on "researching" as an industry.

I disagree entirely with Mr. DeCasseres on many things. I consider him the best judge of beer and the second best judge of cheese in these United States. Since he comes of literary tradition, and I come from the prairies and technological background, we differ much concerning the virtues of the scientific method.

Personally I hold that if anybody wants scientifically to investigate such things as the employment rate among red haired secretaries, or the influence of the motion picture or the housing situation in Zamboanga, it is proper to let it be done. If it were not for research we would still be believing that tomatoes cause cancer. The motion picture should have no more objection to research than a bartender has to a cash register, and if it has perhaps it is for the same reasons.

But this is Mr. DeCasseres' notion, and his space in which to say it.—

TENTATIVE CODE FOR EXHIBITION

Following is the complete text of the tentative "Code of Standards of Fair Competition in the Exhibition of Motion Pictures," as drafted by the executive committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. Paragraphs 1, 5, 6, 7 and 8 have been accepted to date by the distributors. Many changes are likely.

Pictures Violating Production Code

1. No exhibitor shall be required to play or pay for the exhibition of any motion picture which is declared to be contrary to and violative of the "Code of Standards of Fair Competition in the Production of Motion Pictures."

Fair Protection

2. No exhibitor shall demand nor be granted in any license agreement "protection" in time or area beyond that which under all circumstances and conditions then prevailing in the locality where the exhibitor's theatre is situated, is reasonable and fair. Protection not to exceed what is set up by the local Zoning Committee.

Uniform Protection Schedule

3. Exhibitors who customarily receive "protection" in license agreements or who are affected by "protection" granted to other exhibitors shall agree to or be bound by any uniform maximum protection and zoning schedule which shall be adopted by any fairly and truly representative group of exhibitors in the same territory, in which are located the theatres of such exhibitors.

Maximum Protection

4. No exhibitor in territories where there exists a maximum protection and zoning schedule shall demand or receive protection in excess of the applicable maximum therein provided.

In cases of controversy to any such applicable maximum the controversy shall be submitted to arbitration in accordance with the arrangements for arbitration provided in such maximum protection and zoning schedule; and the decision of the arbitrators in such regard shall be binding.

Offer of Gratuity

5. No exhibitor shall give any gratuity or make any offer or promise of gratuity to a distributor or any representative of any distributor for the purpose of procuring advantages that would not otherwise be procurable or as an inducement to influence such distributor or representative not to deal with competing or other exhibitors.

Inducement to Breach Contract

6. No exhibitor shall seek to induce or induce a distributor or any representative of any distributor to breach any contract licensing the exhibition of motion pictures with a competing or other exhibitor.

Overbuying

7. No exhibitor shall contract for the license to exhibit more motion pictures than such exhibitor reasonably requires for exhibition in any theatre or theatres operated by such exhibitor and with the effect of depriving a competing or other exhibitor from contracting to exhibit such excess number of motion pictures.

Selective Contracts

8. Any exhibitor who enters into an option contract providing for the selection of a limited number of feature pictures (less than 85% as provided in the Standard Contract) as released, shall accept or reject by written notice to the distributor, each picture (not to exceed the number which may be selected under the terms of the contract) within 14 days after its general release date. It shall be deemed rejected and excluded from such license contracts and forthwith become available for license to any other exhibitor.

Admission Prices

9. No exhibitor shall directly or indirectly by means of gifts, premiums, two for one admissions or other methods or devices of similar effect reduce prices of admission at any theatre operated by such exhibitor, except as approved by the local Maximum Clearance and Zoning Schedule.

Double Features

10. No exhibitor shall (except in territories where under the provisions of an adopted maximum clearance and zoning schedule double feature exhibitions are expressly permitted) exhibit two or more feature pictures on the same program. A feature picture is defined as one originally made and released as 4,000 feet in length.

Box Office Statements

11. No exhibitor shall delay making and delivering with all reasonable promptness a correct itemized statement of each day's receipts from the exhibition of any motion picture and from so-called midnight shows if any, when the license fee thereof is based in whole or in part on a percentage of the exhibitor's admission receipts.

Transfer to Avoid Contracts

12. No exhibitor shall transfer the ownership or possession of a theatre operated by any such exhibitor with the effect of avoiding uncompleted contracts for the exhibition of motion pictures at such theatre.

Unauthorized Exhibitions

13. The unauthorized exhibition of a motion picture and the doing by any exhibitor of acts which are illegal or in violation of the Copyright Law or exhibition license, gives such exhibitor an unfair competitive advantage over the exhibitor who is honest, obeys the law and lives up to his contractual obligations; misappropriates a portion of playing time market of the industry; disrupts other exhibitor's bookings and scheduled exhibitions and imposes a burden of expense and waste which must be borne by producers, distributors and exhibitors. Therefore no exhibitor shall engage in any of the following harmful and prohibited practices:

Midnight Shows

(a) The exhibition of a motion picture between the hours of 12:0- A. M. and dawn of any day immediately prior, or subsequent to the licensed and booked run of such picture without securing express, written permission therefore under the license agreement.

Unauthorized Showing

(b) The exhibition of a motion picture at any time or place other than on the date or dates and at the place expressly booked and confirmed in writing pursuant to the exhibition license; or by means of a print acquired from any source other than the lawfully authorized distributor; or of lawfully acquired, from such distributor for any purpose other than for exhibitions so booked and confirmed, whether or not a general exhibition license exists which contemplates a future booking of such exhibitions or specifies a different number of or other day of exhibition.

Switching

(c) The use of a print at a substituted theatre operated by the same exhibitor without a written license for such exhibition from the distributor.

Bicycling

(d) The use of a print furnished by the distributor licensing exhibition at only an expressly specified theatre for exhibition at an unlicensed theatre or theatres operated by the same exhibitor. Also the use of such print for exhibition at two or more theatres when licensed in the alternative at only one or the other of such theatres regardless of whether the number of days licensed is or is not exceeded.

Duping, Subrenting, Loaning for Illegal Purposes

(e) The use of a print for any purpose whatsoever other than exhibitions duly licensed and booked and for which the print was furnished by the distributor, including such prohibited uses as for example, duping or printing copies, reduction to 16mm. or other size; selling, leasing, pledging, or otherwise asserting any dominion thereover; using ar making the print available for television, broadcasting or non-theatrical exhibitions in homes, schools, stores, prisons, fraternal, social, charitable or educational meetings or elsewhere.

Abetting Unauthorized Exhibitions

(f) The delivering or making available for delivery either for cash or other consideration or in exchange for similar privileges, a print furnished by the distributor for licensed exhibition or acquired illegally for the purpose of aiding, abetting or accomplishing unlicensed exhibitions at a place or places other than the licensed theatre.

Late Return

(g) The failure to return or to forward, except for reasons beyond the exhibitor's control, to the distributor's exchange or another exhibitor a print of any motion picture immediately after its last licensed and scheduled exhibition so as to render it difficult or impossible for the print to arrive on time at the theatre of the next exhibitor who has scheduled its exhibition.

Holding Over

(h) The withholding of the prompt return of a print for additional exhibitions at any theatre in excess of the time licensed and booked in writing, without first securing an additional written license for the extra exhibitions from the distributor of the print upon payment of the rental therefor.

Liability on Circuit Shipments

(i) When an exhibitor is designated in lieu of a common carrier, by the distributor, to forward a picture or pictures to another exhibitor, the exhibitor forwarding the picture shall be the agent of the distributor and not otherwise.

Percentage Pictures

14. No guarantee shall be required on straight percentage pictures.

Recommendations to Distributors

In addition to a code for self-regulation to provide for fair competition in the exhibition of motion pictures, we believe there are matters of no less vital importance to exhibitors which should be embodied in a code for distribution. These are trade practices solely on the part of the distributors in which exhibitors are vitally interested but which as a matter of self-regulation can only be controlled and remedied in a code of fair competition for distribution subscribed to by the distributors.

Therefore, we urge that the distributors give careful consideration to the following matters which we consider unfair trade practices:

We urge that:

1. All distributors use a standard form of contract. (a) The Optional Standard License Agreement already negotiated and used by a majority of the distributors be used exclusively by all distributors. This form of contract can be improved upon at a later date but is the only standard form immediately available for use.

2. Block Booking. In contracts for the exhibition of groups of ten or more pictures the exhibitor have the privilege of rejecting at least 15 per cent of the number of pictures in the group without payment therefore.

3. Protection. The exhibitors and distributors form a definite zoning plan in each distribution center clearly defining a fair standard of protection and run for that territory.

In cases of controversy as to any such applicable maximum the controversy shall be submitted to arbitration in accordance with the arrangements for arbitration provided in such maximum protection and zoning schedule; and the decision of the arbitrators in such regard shall be binding.

4. Arbitration. All trade disputes, controversies and disputes and claims arising under exhibition contracts be submitted to a local arbitration board equally representative of exhibitors and distributors for final determination and that the findings of such arbitration board be binding and enforceable against either party to the dispute.

5. Cut Rate Competition. Distributors refuse to permit the exhibition of their pictures at unreasonably low admission prices in direct competition with a theatre charging a fair admission scale.

6. Tying in Shorts with Features. Distributors must not sell an exhibitor short subjects as a condition of contracting for feature pictures, or vice versa.

7. Selective Service Contracts. If an option contract providing for the selection of a limited number of pictures (less than 85 per cent, as provided in the Standard Contract) as released is made. such contract should provide for the automatic rejection of any and all pictures up to the total number, after 14 days from release.

8. Overbuying. Distributors must refrain from selling additional pictures to a theatre endeavoring to buy more pictures than it can reasonably use with the intent of depriving a competing theatre of needed attractions. We urge as a cure for these situations:

(a) That the exhibitor be required to release pictures on selective service contracts promptly.

(b) That the local arbitration board be empowered and shall investigate such situations on complaint and, if necessary, try to secure the release of pictures to correct the situation.

9. Double Features. That distributors refuse to permit the exhibition of their pictures on double feature programs in towns or communities where a majority of the exhibitors are opposed to the practice.

10. Playing Arrangements. Distributors shall not require any specific day or days of the week for exhibitions.

The above, in our opinion, are the major matters which exhibitors feel should be regulated as trade practices in a code for distribution. There are other and relatively minor matters, however, which may be acute in a particular situation and on which provisions should be made in a code for distribution by restraint on current trade practices which may tend toward unfair competition in the industry. Some of these are:

1. Non-Theatrical Competition. Non-theatrical accounts are unfair competition and shall not be sold by the distributors.

2. Exclusive Runs. This is a difficult question. Many hundreds of small towns have always shown pictures exclusive run in their town for the simple reason that there were no subsequent run theatre or places for exhibition. The idea has about run its course apparently and may not be revived. It is very difficult to define in any code this matter in such a way as to fairly correct an abuse that might develop some time in the future as the result of this policy, and at the same time not interfere with the operation of theatres where technically an exclusive run may be well justified because of local conditions.

3. Commercial Advertising in Pictures. This shall be prohibited in a standard form of exhibition contract.

4. Substitutions. This shall be clearly defined in a standard form of contract.

5. Failure to Return Prints Promptly. Provided for in the Optional Standard License Agreement.

6. Threats, intimidation and/or the actual acquisition of theatres by a producer or distributor directly or indirectly, to create unfair competition and/or compel the leasing of pictures at a higher film rental should be expressly prohibited.

7. It is unfair for any distributor's employe to be financially interested, directly or indirectly, in any theatre in the territory serviced by the zone office with which the employe is connected. This shall not be permitted.

8. Re-issues. Provided for in the Optional Standard License Agreement.

9. Foreign Pictures. These must be specifically set forth as such in the exhibition contract.

10. Sales Policy. If a distributing company an-

Selling Inefficient, Wilby's Retort to Leaders' Comment

In last week's issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD a number of distribution executives somewhat sharply commented upon the observations of Mr. R. B. Wilby of Atlanta on the current practices of the industry of making and distributing pictures. It was not to be supposed that so seasoned a showman, with opinion based on the findings of so markedly able and successful a career, would accept their observations in silence. Mr. Wilby has been thinking things over, very carefully, with a very considerable lapful of theatre problems before him, and his mind is made up most definitely. In a letter presented below, he makes himself quite clear, again. —TERRY RAMSAYE

"Dear Mr. Ramsaye:

"The comment which the current HERALD is carrying on the letter which I wrote you, and which was printed, is just as convincing as a bootlegger's statement about prohibition.

"Of course, these fellows who are the head of distribution believe that distribution ought to be just like it is, and that all of the faults in this industry—there are some faults, although you could not tell it from their comments—are the result of bad production on the West Coast and bonehead exhibition.

"If these fool exhibitors would go ahead and get the money they should out of pictures, and the West Coast would produce pictures for what they should, why there would be nothing to worry about, and, of course, the fellows distributing the pictures have nothing to do with either of those two things. It's just some theorist like Wilby who talks out of turn and suggests that maybe distribution enters into the problem at all.

"As a matter of fact, this whole distributing thing is a little bit like the bureau in a political organization. The theatres get together what money they can, pass it on to them, they take out their cost and give what's left to the producers of pictures, who must do their best with that.

"If they cannot make good pictures with that which is available, that's too bad; and if the theatres cannot exist on that which they get for their part, that's too bad; but in no case do the boys in between suffer, and they mustn't be inconvenienced by having some one talk out of turn about their place in the industry or about their own inefficiency.

"Grad Sears talks about theory. Why, when Grad was still a good running halfback on a high school football team, W. W. Irwin won some sort of an award offered by Bill Johnston in your own paper for the most constructive suggestion regarding this industry. Mr. Irwin's suggestion took the form of a rather carefully thought out and fully detailed plan for common physical distribution of films, not as Mr. Jack Cohn seems to think, the common selling of film. There was nothing about the Irwin plan—and I claim no more than to quote it—that would interfere in any way with what the exchange fellows like to call selling. Mr. Jack Schlaiffer's comment, that no matter what arrangement could be made for effective so-called greater economies, the distributor would still get his 25 per cent, is most interesting. Maybe the distributor of Universal would then have some money which could be passed on to the stockholders.

"It just isn't possible in exhibition to sell pictures in a theatre at 40c first run and have them played back in other theatres at 10c. It's just against all laws of merchandise to sell the same commodity at two different prices at that near the same time.

"Some day the distributor is going to find out that he, too, can't get the spread between the $1,500.00 first run and the $17.50 third run in Birmingham, Ala. He won't be able to get it because that first run theatre is not going to have it to give to him, unless it gets some sort of protection.

"The fact still remains that a lot of money is being taken in in this industry and practically every company in it is broke.

"For my part, I'm just damned if I see how it's going to quit being broke by doing the same things which broke it, unless inflation or something of the kind saves it temporarily. Hence, my comment that it will be a healthy thing if business does not pick up too quickly."

R. B. WILBY,
Valatenga Theatres, Paramount Theatre Building, Atlanta, Ga.

It may be observed that the observations of Mr. Wilby with reference to protection and its relation to merchandise values are of particular importance at a moment when the industry must take this much debated subject into consideration in its formulation of an operating code under the Recovery Act.

Fox Film Plans Stock Reduction In Reorganization

Fox Film Corporation proposes to reduce the authorized Class A and Class B shares of the company, it was revealed last week when the New York Stock Exchange made public a notice received from the company relative to the reduction. Reorganization plans are to be offered to shareholders of the company at the annual meeting this week.

The split of the company's Class A shares will be made on the basis of six old shares for one new share, reducing the class from 4,900,000 shares to 404,276 2/3, and then increasing authorized new Class A common to 2,800,000 shares, partly to provide for exercise of stock purchase warrants and conversion of debentures. Class B stock will be reduced from 100,000 shares to 16,650 on the same basis as the Class A.

Of the unissued old Class A common stock 445,000 shares are reserved for exercise of stock purchase warrants and 900,000 shares for conversion of debentures. The new Class A stock to be issued will have a market value of approximately 21¾.

Reorganization plans were announced in principle last April for General Theatres Equipment, which controls the Fox company by virtue of ownership of 1,221,213 Class A shares of Fox Film Corporation as of March 31, 1932. In April announcement was made by a combined debenture holders' committee that agreement had been reached in principle on a plan of reorganization under which preferred stock of the new company would be issued on a pro rata basis for debentures and for $19,700,000 of General Theatres notes held by the Chase National Bank. The new company would acquire the principal assets of the old company, including voting trust certificates for the Class A shares of Fox Film Corporation. It is indicated that the Chase National Bank has given assurance of willingness to cooperate in carrying out the plan.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

The public of Vancouver has protested against our recent paragraph which said that Fox's "Cavalcade" contained one outstanding flaw when it showed a Titanic life preserver with the inscription "S. S. Titanic—Southampton," whereas it should have read, "Liverpool." Letters to the editor of the Vancouver Province say that Southampton is correct. But other detail-chasers in Canada have discovered:

1. That the boy in sailor uniform in "Cavalcade" was wearing an American outfit, and not an English suit, English sailors having bars on them, not stars;
2. That the badge of rank worn by Roberts in one scene was incorrect, as he was wearing two stars instead of one;
3. That the toy guns with which the children played were 1933 models;
4. That the uniforms and instruments of the German band were incorrect;
5. That Lady Marryot must have opened her husband's mail when she swoomed at the news of her son's death, for the War Office would have notified Sir Robert first.

Because of the difficulty of getting federal judges sitting on film cases to understand the meaning of the word "protection" as it is applied by motion picture distributors and exhibitors, leaders of the business have decided to abandon the term, and, instead, use the word "clearance." A representative of the distributors, in explaining the difficulty of making judges understand correctly, said that most of the federal magistrates cannot understand that our protection is not the same as that in the speakeasy racket where saloon-keepers pay the police a five-dollar bill.

PROPOSED CODE FOR DISTRIBUTION

Herewith is the text of the preliminary and tentative "Code of Standards of Fair Competition in the Distribution of Motion Pictures." Paragraphs 1, 3 and 4 have been accepted by the executive committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Pictures Violating Production Code

1. No distributor shall distribute in the United States any motion picture which has not been produced in accordance with and which does not conform to the standards and requirements of production of the "Code of Standards of Fair Competition in the Production of Motion Pictures."

Foreign Pictures Violating Production Code

2. No picture produced outside of the United States of America shall be distributed in the United States if such picture does not conform to the standards and requirements of production of the "Code of Standards of Fair Competition in the Production of Motion Pictures."

Ban Upon Pictures Violating Production Code; Appeal

3. A distributor of motion pictures who is advised by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., that a picture distributed by such distributor or announced for distribution is not in conformity with and is in violation of the standards and requirements of production of the "Code of Standards of Fair Competition in the Production of Motion Pictures," shall refrain from distributing such picture. The procedure and all the remedies provided for an appeal from an opinion that a motion picture is in violation of the standards and requirements of the said Code shall be afforded to such distributor.

Advertising

4. No distributor shall, in advertising motion pictures, violate the letter or spirit of the following standards of fair competition in advertising and exploitation or means of exploitation:

1. Lurid and suggestive advertising matter shall not be employed.

2. Nudity with meretricious purpose, or salacious postures, shall not be used.

3. Profanity and vulgarity shall be avoided.

4. Specific details of crime, inciting imitation, or disclosing methods, shall not be used.

5. Illustrations and text in advertising shall faithfully represent that which is contained in the picture itself.

6. No false or misleading statement shall be used directly, or implied by type arrangements or by distorted quotations.

7. No text or illustrations shall ridicule or tend to ridicule, any religion or religious faith; no illustrations of a character in clerical garb shall be shown in any but a respectful manner.

8. The history, institutions, and nationals of all countries shall be represented with fairness.

9. Pictorial and copy treatment of officers of the law shall not be of such a nature as to undermine their authority.

10. Court actions relating to censoring of pictures, or other censorship disputes, are not to be capitalized in advertising.

11. Good taste shall be the standard and the rule for all advertising and exploitation of motion pictures.

Film Boards of Trade—Their Purpose and Objects

5. Film Boards of Trade throughout the United States representative of the distributors of motion pictures in the exchange centers of the United States shall continue their operations as local trade associations for the purpose, among other things, of functioning within the sphere of the operations of trade associations and of specifically performing the following:

(a) The supervision of the granting by members of the right of exhibition of the motion pictures distributed by such of them without charge at public and quasi-public institutions which are properly equipped to show sound motion pictures and are properly protected against fire hazards, in cases where such institutions house or care for inmates confined in them; the allocation equally among the members of the number and class of motion pictures to be supplied for such purpose.

(b) The collection of statistics regarding (1) the number of theatres, their ownership, management, seating capacity, location, policy of operation and character of entertainment offered in each instance; (2) the number of pictures contracted for by each theatre and the names of the distributors with whom contracts are made; the number of pictures exhibited and those contracted for and not exhibited.

(e) The representation of distributors before legislative boards and committees in connection with any existing or proposed national, state or municipal legislation affecting motion pictures, their production, distribution or exhibition.

(f) The prevention of fraud upon the distributors of motion pictures and the creation and supervision of credit committees and rules which shall be adopted by distributors in pursuance of such purpose and which shall provide among other rules generally expressive of the purposes of this section, rules for action by distributors individually or collectively for the attainment of the objects and purposes of this section.

Credit Bureau

8. Distributors shall establish and maintain a credit bureau in an effort to eliminate and correct unfair, illegal and fraudulent trade practices by exhibitors and abuses arising out of (a) the wilful repudiation of exhibition contracts without just cause or reason therefor; (b) changes of ownership of theatres made to avoid uncompleted exhibition contracts; and to secure information of the credit responsibility of exhibitors for the purpose of lessening credit risk and to prevent fraud. In such connection rules shall be adopted by the distributors which shall provide rules generally expressive of the purposes of the bureau's functions.

Clearance

9. Distributors of motion pictures shall agree with such owners or operators of theatres within the geographical area corresponding to their respective distribution territories or any subdivision thereof, who agree upon the maximum clearance that shall be granted to theatres in any such territory or subdivision according to a classification of theatres by zones, provided such agreement of theatre owners or operators is entered into by exhibitors truly and fairly representative of both first run and subsequent run theatres and their respective seating capacities within any such area, provided further such agreement is fair and reasonable and non-discriminatory in its provisions, and provided further such agreement shall provide for a system for the arbitration of disputes among exhibitors regarding the maximum length of clearance and classification of theatres by zones, which system of arbitration shall provide for equal representation of distributors with exhibitors as arbitrators.

Maximum Clearance

10. Distributors of motion pictures in territories in which there is an adopted maximum clearance and zoning schedule shall not grant to any theatre embraced within the provisions of such schedule, clearance in excess of the maximum therein provided.

Avoidance of Breaches of Clearance and Zoning Schedule

11. Distributors of motion pictures shall refuse to enter into contracts licensing the exhibition of their motion pictures by any exhibitor affected by or coming within the provision of any maximum clearance and zoning schedule who:

(b) Indirectly reduces the price of admission below the minimum price set forth in the contract for the licensing of the exhibition of motion pictures by means of gifts, premiums, two for one admissions or any other method or device of similar effect.

(c) Reduces the price of admission below a fair competitive level either directly or indirectly by means of gifts, premiums, two for one admissions, and similar devices or methods of similar effect.

(d) Exhibits two feature pictures on the same day for the same admission price.

Agreements Among Distributors Permitted

12. Any distributor of motion pictures may agree with other distributors not to license the exhibition of its motion pctures to any exhibitor who commits any of the practices enumerated in the foregoing paragraphs 9, 10, and 11.

Arbitration of Disputes re Unfair Competition

13. A dispute or controversy between any exhibitor and any distributor or between theatre owners concerning a claim that any such exhibitor charges admission prices below a fair competitive level or that the exhibitor has engaged or is engaging in any of the unfair practices enumerated in paragraph 11 and its subdivisions a, b, c, and d, with the effect of competing unfairly, shall be submitted to arbitration according to the arrangement for arbitration set forth or provided for in paragraph 9; and the award of the arbitrators in each such case shall be final and binding upon the parties to such dispute.

Agreements Among Distributors Prohibited

14. No distributor of motion pictures shall agree with one or more other distributors to refuse to contract to license the exhibition of its motion pictures to any exhibitor for any reason not contained in this code of fair competition.

Unfair Sales Method

15. No distributor or any sales representative of any distributor shall use a signed application for a contract by an exhibitor for the purpose of securing higher rental prices from another exhibitor by the exhibition thereof to such exhibitor during the conduct of negotiations for a contract for the licensing of the exhibition of motion pictures.

Promises of Gratuity

16. No distributor or any representative of a distributor shall give or promise any gratuity to an exhibitor in exchange for advantages not otherwise procurable between distributors and exhibitors in negotiations for contracts for the licensing of the exhibition of motion pictures.

Offers to Distributors' Employees

17. No distributor or representative of any distributor shall make any offer directly or indirectly of any money inducement or advantage of any kind to any employee of any other distributor in an effort to persuade or induce such employee to become dissatisfied with such employment or to breach any contract covering such employment.

Misappropriation of Advertising Values

18. No distributor of motion pictures shall knowingly and wilfully appropriate the value of another distributor's expenditures for advertising or publicising any motion picture, the title or plot thereof or any player featured therein.

Unfair Condition of Contract

19. No distributor shall, as a condition of entering into a contract for the licensing of the exhibition of its motion pictures, require an exhibitor with whom negotiations are being conducted, to also contract for the licensing for exhibition of motion pictures of another distributor.

Feature Pictures Without Shorts

20. No distributor shall require in negotiations for any contract for the licensing of the exhibition of its feature motion pictures, as a condition of the distributor's agreement to enter into such a contract, that the exhibitor, with whom such negotiations are being conducted, contract also for the licensing for exhibition of news reels and short subjects distributed by such distributor.

Coercing Exhibitor

21. No distributor shall coerce or intimidate any exhibitor to enter into any contract for the exhibition of motion pictures by threats and the commission of an overt act authorized by a corporate officer of the distributor evidencing an intention to build or otherwise acquire a motion picture theatre for operation in competition with and for the purpose of driving such exhibitor out of business.

Exclusion of Pictures When Licensed in Group

22. No distributor shall offer to license the exhibition of its feature pictures in a group or block of all or substantially all the feature pictures announced by the distributor for distribution during any season without also offering to the exhibitor accepting such offer, in option to exclude from such group, not exceeding fifteen (15%) per cent of the total number thereof, according to the following arrangement: The exhibitor shall have the right to exclude from the license five (5%) per cent of the total number upon payment of the fees therefor specified, such fees to be repaid to the exhibitor by the distributor if the exhibitor has duly performed the terms and conditions of the license agreement by him to be performed; to further exclude not to exceed five (5%) per cent of the total number upon payment to the distributor of one-half of the fees specified therefore; and to further exclude not to exceed five (5%) per cent of said total number upon payment of the fees specified therefor or by adding and apportioning equally the amount thereof to the fees for the pictures then remaining to be delivered, provided that if there are no pictures then remaining to be delivered upon payment to the distributor of said amount at the time of exclusion.

Fire Prevention

23. In each territory wherein any distributor maintains an exchange, such exchange shall abide by the regulations promulgated by the Film Boards of Trade in such territory for the prevention of fire, for the holding of fire drills, and rigid monthly inspections; the inspection of prints, the storing of inflammable material, the maintenance and testing of sprinkler systems and fire extinguishers, the avoidance of

FOX CIRCUIT UNDER DECENTRALIZING

The following is the first complete listing of disposition of Fox and Radio-Keith-Orpheum theatres to be published since receivership activities started, and details the story on decentralization which appeared in last week's issue. These lists are presented in as comprehensive a manner as possible. In the cases of Fox Theatres, West Coast, Midland and Rocky Mountain, under each circuit name heading there appear three separate sections: first, names of theatres not in receivership; second, those in receivership; and, third, new operating companies. The third heading indicates those theatres in the first section which were turned over to sub-operating companies and thus were kept clear of receivership, and the second section lists those theatres in receivership.

The Paramount theatre list will appear in next week's issue.

AL CAPONE'S CAR IS NEW COMPETITION

An unusual, though obviously temporary source of competition hit Seattle downtown theatres last week, when a traveling "store show" featuring "Al Capone's Car" occupied an empty store, where a lecturer rendered a full description. With admission at ten cents for adults and five cents for children, business was brisk. The car is exhibited under the auspices of the Crime Prevention Company, Inc., and is said to have been confiscated by the government several months ago. Plentiful advertising, including newspaper space, window cards and dodgers, kept the public interested.

PAPER POINTS OUT ENDORSEMENT VALUE

Indicating the value of the endorsement of motion pictures by civic groups, the Press-Scimitar, in Memphis, Tenn., editorially had this to say recently concerning Universal's release, "Be Mine Tonight":

"The Nineteenth Century Club's sponsorship of the picture, 'Be Mine Tonight,' far surpassed in its success even the club's expectations. For 11 days the film ran at the Linden Circle in response to continued demand.

"Such is a demonstration of two facts: first, that a civic organization such as this can exert a strong influence in the entertainment trend in the community; second, that such influence is successful when it becomes a positive rather than a negative factor.

"In the past, theatre men have usually shied at 'official endorsements' from women's clubs. The reason has been plain. These endorsements usually have been negative, predicated on the assurance that there was nothing 'morally objectionable' in the picture, which too often was about the only good thing that could be said for the film.

"Though 'Be Mine Tonight' was morally above reproach, the Nineteenth Century Club endorsed it for its delightful and enjoyable qualities. Such endorsement means something to the public. After the club's success in this instance, it is safe to assume that no theatre will shy at receiving their public endorsement on any film they select."

E. C. Rhoden, Midwest Division Manager for Fox West Coast, writes: "Have just checked the returns of the first engagement of 'King of Jazz' and I am happy to tell you that it has turned in a very satisfactory gross . . . In talking to the manager I find that the reaction of the audience is great and, after all, that is the important thing . . . It was a happy thought of Universal to reissue this subject right at a time when the public is looking for musical entertainment."

Relative changes in theatre receipts of three Midwestern cities — Chicago, Kansas City and Minneapolis — since the first week of the "New Deal" are shown in the graph, based upon Motion Picture Herald's weekly compilation of box office data. Taking as 100 per cent the gross in each of the three cities for the week ended March 11, 1933, the grosses for the following thirteen weeks compare as shown.

Codes Drafted for Exhibiting, Selling

I will use all of my influence against exhibitors who are themselves inclined to be unfair because there are notorious offenders on both sides of the fence.

"There must be brought about a better and more cooperative spirit between producers and exhibitors. They must, in the future, be helpful to each other instead of always at each others' throats as they have been in the past.

"I am dedicating this organization and my own personal efforts to the bringing about of this condition. Surely those who are truly sincere will cooperate with me."

See 4,000 Houses Reopening

Four thousand closed theatres in the United States may be reopened through the drafting of the industry's code, it was estimated last week. Following the lines of the Industrial Recovery Act, the basic purpose of which is the increase of employment, the reopening of these houses would mean a vast increase in the industry, the only practical means by which the motion picture business is able to contribute to re-employment. Sales forces, booking and clerical staffs also will be largely augmented as a result.

In opening the meetings on June 14, Will H. Hays made the following statement:

"The motion picture industry welcomed the opportunity to apply the function of self-regulation to the aims laid down in the National Industrial Recovery Act, which demands the highest possible degree of cooperation from every element in the industry.

"It is our intention that the program now being developed will uphold our common purpose to respond to the need of greater employment, will reflect the majority conceptions of fair relations between distributor and exhibitor, and will make possible the maintenance of proper wage scales in the industry."

Among those who have been in attendance at the Hays office meetings since the meetings got under way are Nicholas M. Schenck and J. Robert Rubin, M-G-M; Harry M. Warner and Sam E. Morris, Warners; R. H. Cochrane, Universal; E. W. Hammons, Educational; Jack Cohn, Columbia; George Schaefer, Paramount; John E. Otterson, Erpi, and Will H. Hays, all MPPDA directors. Others who have attended have been Gabriel Hess and David Palfreyman of the MPPDA; Ed. Kuykendall and M. E. Comerford, representing the MPTOA; Charles O'Reilly, president of the New York Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce; Halold B. Franklin, RKO theatre head, and E. A. Schiller of Loew's. Allied sent some delegates earlier in the meetings, but they have since withdrawn. They were: H. M. Richey, Sidney E. Samuelson, James C. Ritter, Al Steffes and Nathan Yamins.

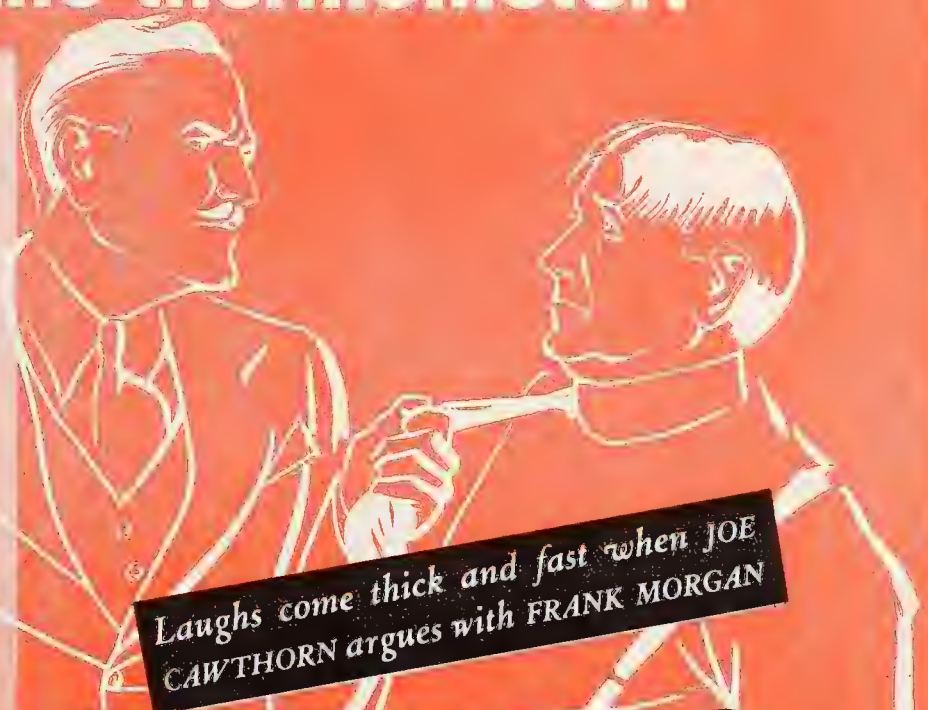
Public Works Project Underway

Meanwhile expenditure of more than a third of a billion dollars immediately on public and semi-public works, giving jobs to approximately 350,000 men, has been planned in 15 key cities in preparation for the $3,300,000,000 public works program of the recovery act. The Government is setting in motion at once an $800,000,000 federal works program.

All major business indices showed gains last week. All sections of the country reported increased consumption, while production, employment and wage scales continued to advance and trends of prices of semi-finished and manufactured good were upward.

In New York State alone 50,000 wage earners have been called back to work since the first of the year, the greater portion since March 4.

The 50,000 employees of General Electric Company in its plants in various parts of the country will receive a 5 per cent wage increase effective July 1, it was announced Tuesday.



The nation's industries were told in plain words Tuesday by General Hugh S. Johnson that initiative in the program for restoring business rests upon private enterprise.

NEW CODE AND CONTRACT TO RULE PRODUCER-AGENT-CLIENT RELATIONS

Final Adoption to Follow Establishment of Academy's Revised Constitution; Talent Brokers Now Studying Plan

Contractual relations between producers, agents and the more important talent of Hollywood would be governed by a new standard contract and code of practice, which finally was completed and revised last week after conferences lasting months. The new agreement is now in the hands of the 93 licensed brokers, and while final adoption cannot be forthcoming until after the Academy establishes its new constitution, within a week or so, it is likely the final draft will be accepted by the large agents without many drastic revisions. Considerable opposition had been evidenced in Hollywood by the agents against the code, many claiming that the document is partisan, favoring the producers. Changes were made following the voicing of opposition by the agents, and the second form was sent to them for action.

Cooperating with the Academy committee, which was in charge of Lester Cowan, secretary of the association, were members of the board and several of the large Hollywood agencies, including those of Ruth Collier and Minna Wallis, Joyce and Selznick, Frank and Dunlap, Phil Berg, Dave Thompson, Morrie Small, Leo Morrison, Arthur Landau, Eddie Silton, Harry Weber and Harry Wurtzel.

Mr. Cowan explained that the Academy agency committee which drew the pact was not empowered to negotiate its adoption with agents, but was merely a fact-finding organization, and that it was appointed to get views from all elements involved and then draft a code and standard contract accordingly, for submission to the Academy membership. He also said that the matter of a membership branch in the Academy for the agents would have to await operation of the proposed constitution.

Agents attended a final meeting Saturday night to discuss the new code and contract, and although many still are in opposition to various clauses, the revised code now goes before the board of directors of the Academy and then to the various branches for ratification. If a vote by the Academy favors the contract-code, the Academy will insist that it become an integral part of all contracts between agents and clients.

As previously noted in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, the Academy, under its new constitution, plans to be self-sustaining. Details of the new set-up appeared in the HERALD on April 29.

The new revised code and standard contract for producers-agents-talent follows:

STANDARD CONTRACT

Memorandum of Agreement between..... .....Agent, and..... Artist.

The term hereof shall be from..... to....., except that the Artist shall continue to pay the commissions provided herein for so long a period as he shall continue to be employed upon contracts for his services entered into prior to the above expiration date and upon renewals of such contracts, options exercised thereunder and upon new contracts entered into by him in substitution and/or replacement of such contracts.

Field of Representation

It is the primary intent of this contract to set forth the relationship of the Artist and the Agent in connection with employment in motion picture production and with activities directly connected with such production.

With regard to all such employment in motion picture production the commissions set forth below shall be paid by the Artist to the Agent without the necessity of any evidence whatsoever that the employment has been secured or negotiated by the Agent.

Employment Other Than in Motion Pictures

However, this contract applies also to employment in such other activities and exercises of the talent, labor and capactities of the Artist as may be specifically set forth in the following space: (blanks to be filled out).

With regard to these secondary fields of representation not directly connected with motion picture production, the Agent shall be entitled to the commissions set forth below only when he has been substantially responsible, directly or indirectly, for the securing of the employment of the Artist. In case of dispute the burden of proof shall be upon the Agent.

Commission to Agent

In consideration of the services of the Agent, the Artist agrees to pay and the Agent agrees to accept as full compensation the following commissions, except that in no case shall any commission or percentage paid to the Agent exceed 10 per cent:

For Motion Picture Work

.....% of the amount received by the Artist for employment in or directly in connection with motion picture production.

During Term Contract

Except that when such amount received by the Artist is derived from the employment of the Artist under a contract for more than one year and/or renewable for stated periods at the option of the Producer, the commission paid the Agent by the Artist shall be.....% during the second year,.....% during the third year, ...% during the fourth year and .....% during subsequent years in which the Artist continues to be employed under the term contract or any renewal or extension of such contract or by virtue of the exercise of any option contained in any such contract.

For Other Employment

.....% of the amount received by the Artist for employment other than in motion picture production but set forth under the heading "Field of Representation" above as coming within the scope of this contract.

Payable on Receipt of Compensation

The above commissions shall be due and payable to the Agent immediately upon receipt by the Artist of any compensation whether such compensation be payable as salary, commission, fee, share, bonus, percentage, royalty or otherwise.

Duties of Agent

In consideration of the commissions agreed upon the Agent undertakes the following duties and responsibilities:

A.—To use his best efforts to further the professional interests of the Artist, to develop the personal abilities and increase the earning power of the Artist and to obtain and maintain for the Artist a favorable and valuable professional reputation.

B.—To plan for the future work of the Artist and to seek out and confer with those who may employ or recommend the employment of the Artist.

C.—To negotiate for and endeavor to procure employment on favorable terms for the Artist in the fields of employment designated in this contract.

D.—To promptly inform the Artist of all offers for his services and all inquiries received by the Agent with regard to the Artist's availability for employment.

E.—To examine any and all proposed employment contracts and to give business advice as to their advisability.

F.—To attend any and all conferences between the Artist and Producer or prospective employer when requested by the Artist.

G.—Generally to perform in a competent and painstaking manner the acts and duties of an active business manager of the professional business and employment of the Artist.

H.—To diligently observe as a condition of the validity of this contract that in advising the Artist the Artist's interest and benefit shall be the sole consideration.

Reasonably Continuous Employment

An essential condition of the validity of this contract is that both parties receive reasonably continuous benefits therefrom.

Accordingly, this contract may be cancelled on two weeks written notice by either party, a copy of which must be filed with the Academy, if and when during a period of ..... weeks the Artist has not received or had a bona fide offer of at least one week's employment at the minimum compensation stated below.

This clause, however, shall not be used by the Artist to evade legitimate obligation to the Agent. Upon the filing with the Academy of a complaint charging attempt at such evasion, the contract shall automatically continue in effect until a hearing has been held upon the complaint and a decision rendered.

Minimum Salary

It is understood and agreed that the minimum salary of the Artist shall be the sum of or the equivalent of $.....per week, and upon a daily basis of $.....per day. The Agent agrees that he will not quote a figure less than the above amouts respectively without first having the written permission of the Artist, which permission shall constitute a modification of the minimum salary stated in this paragraph.

If Favorable Vote Is Received, Academy Will Insist That Revised Plan Become Integral Part of All Contracts

Contract Not Assignable

This contract shall not be assignable by the Agent except with the written consent of the Artist.

Agent Must Maintain Service

The parties agree that this contract is essentially for personal service by the Agent to or on behalf of the Artist. If and when the capacity for service by the Agent is substantially reduced, through the fault of the Agent, this contract may be cancelled by the Artist upon filing a complaint with the Academy and giving two weeks written notice to the Agent. However, if the Agent files a denial, plea of extentuating circumstances, or counter-complaint charging attempt by the Artist to evade legitimate obligations, the contract shall automatically continue in effect until a hearing has been held and a decision rendered.

Ground for Cancellation

This contract may be cancelled at the option of the Artist if the Agent should be expelled from membership in the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, the Agent, however, to be subject to such expulsion only in accordance with the Arbitration procedure provided for in the Code of Practice for Artist-Agent-Producer Negotiations.

Arbitration of Disputes

The parties agree that any and all disputes between the Agent and the Artist, and any complaint of violation of any of the terms of this contract, and any claim of the Agent that the Artist without good reason refuses proferred employment or of the Artist that the Agent fails to exercise on his behalf the diligence and competence to be reasonably expected, shall be referred for determination to the Arbitration Procedure of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

The parties further agree that in all cases the award of the arbitration shall be final, and by such award the arbitration board may amend, modity, or suspend this contract, apportion commisisons and determine any adjustment as to payments hereunder.

THE CODE

The tentative code, as submitted to the Agents, for study, is as follows:

Code to Be Signed By:

Academy branches, licensed agents, and the producing companies. Code to be established under the procedure authorized in the new Academy Constitution.

Term

(Clause not yet worked out).

Artist-Agent Contract Minimum Provisions

A.—The parties recognize that it is desirable that certain provisions to insure a mutually fair and ethical relationship should be included in the contract in which an Agent undertakes to represent an Artist with regard to employment in motion picture production.

B.—Agents and Artists signatory to this Code therefore agree that these provisions, as set forth in Sections 16 through 24 of this Code, shall be included in every such contract into which they enter henceforth.

Agent Must Hold Contract

To be recognized as representing the Artist, the Agent shall have a signed contract with the artist, except that in exceptional circumstances the Artist may give the Agent temporary authorization in the form of a letter or telegram. In such event the letter or telegram shall be construed as incorporating all the provisions set forth in Sections 16 through 24 of this Code and a contract shall be substituted for such temporary authorization within 30 days.

List of Agent's Clients

The agent shall file with the Academy a complete list of his clients for whom he is authorized to negotiate motion picture employment, indicating the date on which the contract with each was signed. This list shall be kept confidential by the Academy except for the purpose of administering the Code.

Agency Ownership

The Agent shall file with the Academy a written statement setting forth the names and addresses of all persons connected with the agency as owners, partners or stockholders or persons who have any financial interest in the agency. Whenever any changes occur or other persons become connected with the Agency a supplemental statement shall be promptly

Record Turnout for Twenty-first Event; Awards Presented Following Banquet; List of the Winners of Trophies and Prizes

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Motion picture executives of the East drove some 10 dozen golf balls into the rough on Tuesday at Rye Country Club, Westchester, while competing in the 21st tournament conducted by John Wilde Alicoate's Film Daily. Many dug out, many did not. But all agreed that the day was a great one—even Handicapper Bruce Gallup.

Distribution and exhibition factors abandoned for a day discussions of new season's sales policies and the industry control bill. The entry list broke all records, some 175 actually driving off.

The committee in charge included: J. W. Alicoate, James Cron, Donald Mersereau, Al Lichtman, Lee Ochs, Gradwell Sears, Bruce Gallup and Hal Horne.

Truman Talley and Dan Doherty took the first sound pictures of the tournaments, with Louis Nizer starring as interlocutor, master-of-ceremonies and golfers' chief alibi-man.

In-tro-du-c-I-N-G!

Just Fanny!

FANNY ZILCH

. . . the banker's daughter. She was born when Fanny was a girl's name. The slightly-burnt toast of the town. A gal with everything but the last payment on her flashy runabout.

Si-s-s-s-s!

OIL CAN HARRY

. . . A deep-dyed villain—but his colors run. So tough he uses spinach for a boutonniere. Relentlessly pursues Fanny for her beauty, wealth and streamline effect.

Bra-vo!

STRONGHEART

. . . A hero with a steely glint in his eye and a blush on his cheeks. They done him wrong who called him pansy and thought he couldn't shoot from the hip or fool the desperate Desmonds like a Houdini.

Giddy-Ap!

NAPOLEON, Strongheart's Steed

. . . A fiery charger once free from the milk route. Needs neither whip nor spur when he hears the cry of beauty in distress.

THE FANS WILL HOWL AT THEM, HISS AT THEM AND HIT THE CEILING WITH LAUGHTER AT THEIR ANTICS IN

PHIL M. DALY SAYS:
"One of the funniest cartoons we ever lamped".

• • • SO THE latest novelty from the Terry Toon workshop represents an Idea painstakingly built up by Paul Terry, Frank Moser and Philip Scheib . . . . . they sought for a new fillip to add to the zest of the usual cartoon . . . . . and found it in "The Banker's Daughter" . . . . . done in the technique of the serial meller . . . . . the cartoon characters are humans direct from the ole ten-twenty-thirt' school of stage acting . . . . . a sob meller with hero, heroine and villain in a typical Corse Payton drammer . . . . . done to an original operatic score . . . . . with the characters singing and chanting their lines . . . . . of course it is done in the burlesque tempo . . . . . and the sum total is one of the funniest cartoons we have ever lamped . . . . . there will be four more to come . . . . . Novel and Darned Clever, say we . . . . . .

JUST AN EXHIBITOR DAY

Even His Mother-in-Law Writes for Funds; Bills, Bills, Bills, and That's Only the Whole of It

Oh for the life of a theatre man? Nevertheless, the implied "oh yeahs" are tempered with a delightful sense of humor, that valuable asset to showmen, in this bit from a Wisconsin exhibitor to Mr. Robert A. Hess, counsel in that state for the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. "A typical day in the life of a motion picture exhibitor" is what the theatre man terms the sequence of activities which he lists as follows:

The operator comes in the office to say that we will have to buy some more carbons.

The janitor (who is also operator) comes in to say that we shall have to have some more coal.

The advertising man (who is also the operator) comes in to say that the posters for tonight's show have not yet arrived, and that the sign man wants the five dollars we have owed him for show cards for several weeks.

The weather man calls up to say that there is a storm in the offing, and we will probably have another three days of rain.

The operator comes in to tell us that the opposition has booked the Big Sooper Special "Umptyump" for next week and will probably get all the business on those nights.

The handy man comes in to report that the automobile which we use for distributing our advertising has broken down.

The inspector from the state capital drops in to tell us that if we don't get this or that or the other gadget fixed up within thirty days he'll have to fine us umptyump dollars.

The cashier (who is also the manager's wife) reports that receipts for the night before were $3.60.

There's the Note To Pay

The banker calls up to tell us that the interest on the note is due and we have simply got to make a payment reducing the principal as the banking department is giving them hell.

The cashier reminds us that we are almost out of tickets and will have to have more before Saturday night.

The janitor comes in to report that the vacuum cleaner has broken down again, and the rug on the north aisle is almost through to the floor.

Ha, the mail man comes! What news does he bring?

1. The electric light bill.
2. The film bill.
3. A letter from the furniture man that he simply must have a payment on those draperies.

Even the Mother-in-Law!

4. Requests from at least half a dozen merchants for "something on account," i.e. on account of the fact that the bills have been running for about three years.
5. A letter from a Chicago lawyer that he will file a lien on our Chicago apartment house if we don't pronto pay a decorating bill of $12.00.
6. A letter from our mother-in-law that she simply must have $16.00 this month to pay the taxes on her little home or she will lose it, as she is too old to work and has only a small pension.
7. The telephone bill (Why did I make so damn many long distance calls last month when a letter would have been almost as quick?)
8. A letter from the sound equipment people that because of microscopic grosses their ten per cent per week share has been far too small.
9. Ah, here is a letter from Bob Hess. He says that if we don't pay that music tax pronto we can have a choice of a cell in either Atlanta or Leavenworth, wherein we can spend our declining years in peace and comfort, far from the madding crowd.

Ho Hum. And so to bed. Receipts tonight show a fine increase over last night to the magnificent total of $5.65.

P. S. The enclosed check takes me up to—barring storms and other acts of God or the devil, we should do some business, so I can pay another quarterly installment very shortly.

Text of Proposed Agent—Artist Code

filed with the Academy. The statements required shall be kept confidential by the Academy except for the purposes of administering the Code.

Cast Sheet Available

As a cooperative act to facilitate employment negotiations the Producer will make available to Agents descriptive cast sheets of forthcoming productions, exercising reasonable diligence to insure that this information is furnished as completely and as far in advance as may be feasible.

Right of Artist to Representation

The producer recognizes the right and propriety of the Artist being represented by his Agent if and as the the Artist may desire such representation and according to the terms of the Uniform Contract. The producer recognizes that in all negotiations the Artist is entitled to the advice and counsel of his Agent and to have such Agency accompany or represent him at conferences relating to employment. It is recognized, however, that this clause shall not operate to deter or hamper the close cooperation necessary in production between Artist and Producer.

10% Maximum Commission

A.—The Agent shall not be entitled to ask or accept from the Artist a commission over ten percent of the Artist's remuneration for employment in or directly connected with motion picture production.

B.—The Agent shall not accept from any Producer any special assignment or any employment of his professional services which may affect his Artist client without first receiving the Artist's written consent.

C.—With regard to any employment, negotiations or professional services of the Agent which affect his Artist client, the Agent shall not accept any payment other than from the Artist without the Artist's written consent.

D.—It is the intention of the above clauses to cover all commissions, emolutions, gifts, gratuities or payments of any kind, whether from companies or individuals and whether received directly or indirectly.

Contingent Contract With Client of Another Agent

When an Artist is represented by an Agent signatory to this Code it shall be considered unethical practice and a violation of this Code for another Agent to offer his services upon a contingent basis whereby the commission due such second Agent is contingent upon his procuring for the Artist more compensation than the Artist is receiving.

Arbitration of Disputes

The parties hereto agree that if any complaint is made of violation of this Code or of the provisions which this Code requires shall be incorporated in the representation contract between Agent and Artist, such complaint shall be adjudicated by the following arbitration procedure in the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences:

A.—All such complaints shall be directed to an Adjustment Committee, consisting of one member from each Academy branch and one agent. This Committee shall determine whether such complaint shall be referred to the Academy Conciliation Committee for hearing or be dismissed. In either case a two-thirds vote shall be necessary for action.

B.—The Conciliation Committee shall hear all complaints referred to it by the Adjustment Committee. In all such hearings the Committee shall be augmented by the addition of one agent. A two-thirds vote shall be required for action.

C.—Upon adoption of this code, the Adjustment Committee together with two alternates for each post, and an agent member and two alternates on the Conciliation Committee, shall be appointed. (Clause defining method of appointment not yet worked out.)

Special Procedure If Suspension Involved

Any complaint or action of which the purpose is the suspension or expulsion of any Agent signatory to this Code shall first be referred to the Adjustment Committee provided in the preceding section. The subsequent adjudication, however, shall be by a special Arbitration Board and a unanimous vote of this Arbitration Board shall be required to recommend suspension or expulsion. If such a recommendation is agreed upon by unanimous vote it shall be referred to the Board of Directors, which shall have final authority.

The method of selection and procedure of the Special Arbitration Board shall be as follows:

A.—The Academy Board shall designate a panel of sixty special arbitrators, chosen for their personal integrity and judicial capacity. This panel shall consist of ten Active Members each of the Actors, Directors, Producers, Technicians and Writers' Branches and ten Agents signatory to this Code.

B.—From this panel each party to the controversy to be arbitrated shall indicate fifteen arbitrators who are satisfactory to such party. The fifteen may be chosen from the whole panel.

C.—Each of the parties shall then select two arbitrators and an alternate from the fifteen designated by the other party.

D.—To complete the Arbitration Board the four arbitrators thus selected shall then select a fifth by unanimous agreement. This fifth arbitrator need not be from the panel, the Academy membership or even from the motion picture industry, but must be some person upon whom the four arbitrators agree and whose services can be secured.

E.—The arbitration by this Board shall be governed by the general practice and procedure of the American Arbitration Association, except for such specific provisions as are established in this Code, or by the Academy Constitution or by the laws of California relating to arbitration procedure.

Complaints by Producer

In the event that with regard to any Artist or Agent signatory to this Code the Producer becomes unwilling for cause to abide by the paragraph of this code headed "Right of Artist to Representation." then the Producer shall notify the Academy to such effect and shall immediately bring charges of violation of this Code as grounds for such unwillingness. Until such time as such charges have been adjudicated by the Academy arbitration facilities, the Producer shall take no action which will interfere with the legitimate service of the Agent in behalf of the Artist.

Procedure for Amendment of Code

This code can be amended only by a majority vote of each of the five Academy branches, majority vote of the Agent signatories, and majority vote of the producing company signatories.

Referee Approves Paramount Units

Approval of the four Paramount-Publix subsidiary corporations organized last November was given Tuesday by Referee Henry K. Davis at a meeting in New York of the corporation's creditors. Mr. Davis authorized continuance of the four corporations, with power to make contracts and retain title to assets now held by them. Paramount trustees were also authorized to organize any new subsidiary corporations to acquire theatres, real estate or personal property which was held by other subsidiaries of the company at the time of its bankruptcy in January, when such organizations seem advantageous, and also to dissolve existing subsidiaries, where advisable.

The four subsidiary corporations involved in the order are Paramount Pictures Corporation, Paramount Productions Corporation, Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, and Paramount International Corp.

HERE at the beginning of the new show year, the season of 1933-34 comes Motion Picture Almanac, the big standard reference book of the industry—out in new dress and format. It appears to be a hit. For instance, among the many press clippings and letters bearing pleasant words, is one from a most competent reader, Mr. James O'Shaugnessy of Outdoor Advertising, Incorporated, in which he says:

" It is a complete library of the motion picture industry.

" It is many volumes in one, and any of them would be entitled to a place in a worth while collection of business books of reference.

" As I have been going through its pages, I realize for the first time the gigantic proportions and tremendous significance of the motion picture industry — and I thought I knew a lot about it before.

" I am amazed at the comprehensiveness and the completeness of its ramifying detail and the vast amount of work the almanac represents.

" This book will do more to truly dignify the motion picture industry than a street of rococo palaces.

" If it could be in every home in the country, it would remove the impression that the motion picture industry consists of nothing but sex and savagery.

" Such a worthy and useful book as this must undoubtedly have a good effect on the industry itself. It should give them a better appreciation of its inherent dignity and its limitless obligation to public ethics. "

I Loved You Wednesday

(Fox)

Romantic Comedy

Here's a modern love story with plenty of smart sophistication to catch the fancy of class patrons and more than enough hokum to intrigue the masses. Enhanced by elaborate production, endowed with two spectacular sequences, made colorful by clever, zippy dialogue and moving with a speedy action seldom associated with romantic themes, the quadrangular love story is laden with the elements that make for big city as well as small town entertainment. Surprising performances are contributed by the entire cast, with Miriam (Mimi) Jordan and Victor Jory particularly notable.

Crackling comedy highlighting, Vicki is first presented as a ballet pupil, whose vision of a romantic Brittany holiday is shattered by Randall's announcement that his wife is arriving in Paris next morning. There's little philosophical tragedy as Vicki accepts the wallop to her dreams and Randall temporarily passes out of the picture. Then, shifting to South America, new romance is born as Vicki meets the engineer, Fletcher.

Spectacular Boulder Dam scenes and a vividly sexy interpretative dance, ultra modern in conception and presentation (both well worthy of plenty of shouting), follow to mark the climb of the twain in their professions. Completing a sensational New York engagement, Vicki is set for a yacht trip with Fletcher, when Randall turns up again. Smart, intriguing action, with the lovers fencing for advantage, is climaxed by an elaborate night club scene whose gay cleverness won the preview audience. Comes Randall's wife, Cynthia, to rag-tag everything, not dramatically, rather indifferently, yet with a power that will not be denied. Vicki cannot resist charming Randall. Sincere old Fletcher fades into the background as almost forgotten romance flames again. Tipsy Doc Mary injecting startling comedy, surprise follows surprise, until Cynthia slips her photo into Randall's bag to be found by Vicki as she is helping him pack.

"I Loved You Wednesday" has all the earmarks of a surprise picture. Everything is there to entertain and amuse all types of audiences. Practically everything that a showman wants is included, too. Concoct a brisk localized campaign to stimulate the particular tastes of diversified patronage. With comedy, romance, spectacle, charm, novelty of story and sound of the title to play with in connection with the cast names, a campaign that is as smart as the show should do wonders.

Make a concentrated drive on your women patrons. Predominant appeal will be to adults; while there is nothing objectionable, the show is undoubtedly too-fast paced for children's entertainment.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by Henry King and William Cameron Menzies. From the play by Molly Ricardel and William DuBois. Screen play by Philip Klein and Horace Jackson. Photography by Hal Mohr. Sound, Donald Flick. Settings, Joseph Wright. Dance and ballet direction by Sammy Lee. Musical direction by Louis DeFrancesco. Release date, June 16, 1933. Running time, 75 minutes.

Voltaire

(Warner Bros.)

Drama

Because of its theme, this historical drama is necessarily serious entertainment. Localed in Paris, in 1762, it naturally is a costume picture. Through the personality of one man, Voltaire, it deals with events and conditions involving the rabble and royalty that preceded the French Revolution. While the main trend is studious, producers have not overlooked the necessity of introducing some features that will appeal to the every-day theatre-going types of audiences. Thus the comedy that surrounds the eccentric Voltaire and his associates, particularly his servant, housekeeper and doctor, should generate plenty of laughter and the romance between Nannette and Francois provides the love interest.

The story is told in two parts, the first pertaining to Voltaire's pamphleteering, the second being a presentation in the King's palace of a play which he has written, summing up all the misery of the common people in contrast to the excesses of royalty. The first part is climaxed by the execution of Nannette's father, the second by revolution breaking out when the power of Voltaire's play fails to influence the King and his royal advisers to mend their ways.

The fact that the appeal of features of this type ordinarily is confined to a limited portion of the more serious minded patrons, instead of proving a handicap should be utilized to stir up popular interest. Many ways are available in which to do this. First, of course, is the power of the Arliss name which should be immediately evident to every exhibitor. Second is the novelty of the show. Notwithstanding the fact that it is timed in the mid-18th century years, it affords a terrific contrast to the current modern product. This feature, properly exploited, should serve to stimulate interest.

Supplementing the basic dignified approach, make every effort to strike a popular chord. To many persons, history reading is dry and uninteresting, but when history is served to them in the form of entertainment, it may be more appealing.

Exploitation that takes the form of special articles in the newspapers, editorial or otherwise, stressing the significance of this type of entertainment should prove effective. If schools are in session at the time you play the show, by all means make contacts with teachers in the higher grammar grades, high schools and colleges.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Warner Bros. Directed by John Adolfi. Based on the novel by George Gibbs and E. Lawrence Dudley. Screen play by Paul Green and Maude T. Howell. Supervised by Ray Griffith. Edited by Owen Marks. Assistant director, Ben Silvey. Photography by Tony Gaudio. Art director, Anton Grot. Gowns by Orry-Kelly. Running time, 70 minutes. Release date not set.

Disgraced

Melodrama

Practically all the potential showmanship in this melodrama is concentrated in the show's last third. The early part, following the theme of the poor girl dazzled into love by the rich man, affords little in the way of novelty and is unimpressive. Then with an in-his-class marriage writing finis to the love nest days and nights, the show becomes tremendously dramatic, and with proper stimulation can be made appealing to average adult audiences.

Underwood calls upon the district attorney to help him get rid of his playtime girl, Gay Holloway, who, learning of his forthcoming marriage to Julia, takes a shot at him. Gay's father, ignorant of his daughter's carryings-on, is assigned to the job and kills Underwood. Gay makes a confession before Holloway, Sr., can get back to town and then the show grows more tense as he seeks to take the blame.

He forces the D. A. to permit him to reconstruct the killing and with Gay breaking under the defense attorney's remorseless questioning, Holloway is tried. The prosecution is easy on him. In his dramatic address to the jury, he relates all the circumstances. The fadeout is the tag line, "What Would You Do?"

That's the tip-off as to what should be the most effective means of stirring up interest in "Disgraced." It's the age old story of the unwritten law that should be handed to patrons in the most sensational fashion imaginable. Concoct clever, intriguing copy that hints at but never reveals the topic. Get your audiences in the mood where they will consider themselves judge and jury. Use all the old trick court gags, facsimiles of witness and jury summons as advertising. For your run of the picture, rename your theatre "The Superior Court"—where the most sensational murder case of the age is being tried.

It might be worth while to stage an epilogue, using a judicial looking character on a judge's bench on the stage to rap for order, following court procedure on the "you have all the evidence" thought, and to ask the audience to render its verdict.

The picture is too vigorous for juvenile entertainment.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Erle C. Kenton. Story by Alice D. G. Miller. Photographed by Karl Struss. Running time, 65 minutes. Release date, July 7, 1933.

Captured

(First National)

Melodrama and Romance

A wartime German prison camp is the locale. The melodramatic, triangle romance-tinged story is grimly realistic. Major motivating action accentuates the Allied prisoners' mental and physical reactions to the iron Germanic discipline. The romance angle is far from inspiring even though it concentrates audience sympathy on the lead character. The occasional comedy is that precipitated by stark contrasts. Being a war story, yet approaching its theme from the prisoner angle, "Captured" undoubtedly will be burdened by many handicaps in stimulating patron interest. While it will be difficult to subjugate the war-horror element, a campaign that stresses the romance in all its human interest looks to be the best appeal.

After a reel or so of all the grisliness of prison life—and the plentiful German dialogue makes understanding difficult—there is a revolt which results in the killing of the commandant. When Erlich takes command, Allison finds they are fellow Oxfordians. Through Allison's influence, conditions are vastly improved as he goes bond for the prisoner's good behavior. Allison's only trouble is that he never hears from Monica, whom he met, wooed and married in six days. Into the camp comes Digby, now the recipient of Monica's affections. He's Allison's friend. Allison never can understand his strange behavior, continually tries to talk him out of plans to escape on the grounds of what it will mean to the other prisoners. But Digby goes. Elsa, a little milkmaid, has been raped and killed. Digby is suspected. When a letter from Monica to him is found near the point where he escaped, Allison endorses Erlich's request that the British major general return the escaped prisoner. Much heroic melodrama accompanies the return and Digby is tried and condemned, but Allison finds a confession from the suicide Strogin that he killed Elsa.

Then comes the big push for a wholesale escape. Allison tricks the main gate guards into letting him into the tower and with a machine gun at hand, fast, furious hand-to-hand action follows. Under Digby's guidance all the prisoners escape in planes, while Allison is left to die as the tower is bombed.

The title and theme offer little, and the names of Howard, Fairbanks, Jr., Lukas and Barrat appear to be the most effective medium of stimulating curiosity. The feminine characters appear very little, so strong inference will be necessary to bring out the romance.

A straight-from-the-shoulder campaign, concentrated in advertising and publicity and practically ignoring ballyhoo exploitation but taking full advantage of the modern saleable features of the show, daring and vivid in its conception and development, may bring average business.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Warner-First National. Based on novel, "Fellow Prisoners," by Sir Philip Gibbs. Screen play by Edward Chodorov. Supervised by Hal Wallis. Directed by Roy Del Ruth. Asst. Frank Shaw. Editor Wm. Holmes. Photography by Barney McGill. Art Dir. Robt. Haas. Gowns by Orry-Kelly. Running time, 72 minutes. Release date to be determined.

Victims of Persecution

(Bud Pollard)

Drama

A drama intended for propaganda, pleading against racial intolerance as practiced from time to time against the Jew, this independently produced picture merits little consideration from the standpoint of general exhibition. Where a Jewish community will permit the exhibitor to draw upon an audience wholly in sympathy with the aim of the film, an audience almost necessarily composed for the most part of Jews, the picture may have some selling value.

In addition to its special character, and perhaps even more important, is the wholly weak caliber of the performances. The work of the players, almost without exception, is completely inadequate, scarcely to be expected from a Hollywood studio.

The story concerns a New York judge, played by Mitchell Harris, who is in personal danger from belligerent factions as well as in danger of losing a nomination for governor as a result of his judicial insistence on a completely fair trial for a Negro. Despite the efforts of his friends and his daughter, played by Betty Hamilton, to dissuade him, he persists in his course of action.

A patriarchal grandfather, just arrived for a visit from the Holy Land, contributes ancient wisdom and a homely philosophy. When he learns of the mental struggle of the judge, his son-in-law, he tells an ancient story of his people and persecution, which is depicted with a flash-back technique silently, while the grandfather tells the story, thereby indicating to the judge that his course is the correct one.

The conclusion finds the judge not only vindicated in his stand, but also elected overwhelmingly as governor. The daughter completes the romance carried on with a wealthy young man who had contributed financially to her father's campaign.

The film is beset by a cast which, in its weakness, causes the picture as a whole to lose considerably. The story itself, unfortunately, is too drab, too special in its character to have any wide appeal.—Aaronson, New York.

The Life of Jimmy Dolan

(Warner)

Drama

Geared to an unusually fast pace, suffering no momentary lapses of action or purpose, "The Life of Jimmy Dolan" contains a neat combination of romance of clean-cut, dramatic type, speedy action in the boxing ring, and a clever touch of comedy, capably handled.

The story is well rounded, of definite interest and possessing angles calling for exploitation. It is definitely a salable picture, from the standpoint of dramatic plot components as well as by reason of the type of story involved. The cast is good, and offers at the same time a splendid opportunity for marquee decoration. The leading names should draw patronage, including Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Loretta Young, Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee, Lyle Talbot and Fifi Dorsay, the last two in comparatively minor roles.

It is a down-to-earth yarn, of prize fighters, farms and the boy who is drawn into a clearer view of a purpose in life, learning something of self-sacrifice. Jimmy Dolan wins the light-heavyweight boxing title and celebrates with a wild twosome party in his apartment. His philosophy of life revolves about the conception that a man is a sucker to do something for some one else. Fairbanks is the young and cocky fighter. His manager arrives with Miss Dorsay and a reporter friend. In an ensuing argument Fairbanks hits the reporter, killing him without realizing it, and falls into a drunken stupor. They carry Fairbanks to his training camp in the mountains, and the manager and Fairbanks' girl, escaping in a car, crash and are killed, the resulting fire making the manager unidentifiable.

Fairbanks finally finds himself at a small ranch in the West, meets Aline MacMahon and her niece, Miss Young, who are caring for four paralytic youngsters. Dolan, the night-life fighter, hunted and afraid, comes to love Miss Young. When they are about to lose the ranch for want of a $2,000 payment, Fairbanks goes into the ring for a prize of $500 per round as long as he is able to stay. Kibbee, detective after Fairbanks, comes to the dressing room to get him after Fairbanks had won the necessary $2,000, but relents at the last moment, leaving Fairbanks to return to Miss Young, the aunt and the youngsters.

Miss MacMahon, in her usual splendid style, contributes the comedy, while the youngsters, all giving good performances, add a lively, appealing touch to the story. The exhibitor has here fast action, clean romance and fine performances, with the ring atmosphere lending the opportunity for exploitation. The ring sequence is crowded with punch, having no semblance of artificiality about it, and worth special note in punchy selling copy. Sell the idea of the boy who learned there is satisfaction in doing something for some one else without getting something for it. It is well-rounded, lively entertainment.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Warner Bros. Directed by Archie Mayo. Based on a play by Bertram Milhauser and Beulah Marie Dix. Screen play by David Boehm and Erwin Gelsey. Photographed by Arthur Edeson. Film editor, Bert Levy. Art director, Robert M. Haas. Release date, June 3, 1933. Running time, 70 minutes.

Scenic and Dancing

Frankly of the travelogue type of production, with a bit of action thrown in as the native Hawaiian draws a knife with which to pay his disrespects to the American intruder upon the native dances at a betrothal party, this picture merits interest particularly in its depiction of the islanders' dances. A Tahitian girl's portrayal of a love dance is especially graceful.—Running time, 27 minutes.

Entertaining

Always entertaining, always productive of audience laughs, is this series of subjects, which, with the addition of often humorous accompanying dialogue, pictures the motion picture of yesterday. The fashions are amusing, the action of the players by contrast with today draws virtually continuous laughter. This subject is no exception, including as it does a typical New York crowd of the early days of the century, President Taft at the opening of the Panama Canal, presenting the serious note of general interest, and a "Curse You, Jack Dalton" melodrama, with Sydney Drew and Clara Kimball Young, which provides a continuous laugh, measured unconsciously against today's standards.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Cougar's Mistake

(Educational-Fox)

Interesting

Interesting and actively exciting is the pursuit of a marauding cougar in the hills, via dog pack. When the cougar raids the chicken coop, the baying, racing hounds are set on his trail. Swiftly and surely they trace their objective, until finally he is treed. Roped, the animal is dragged to the ground, there bound and carried off. Though the subject matter has been done before, it is still highly interesting short material, and should prove generally appealing. The effort, in the accompanying dialogue, to make bad puns and the like, serves only to detract from the effectiveness of the subject.—Running time, 9 minutes.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Sioux Falls, S. D.

DEAR HERALD:

They say that "all signs fail in dry weather" and that has been proven here in South Dakota. Usually when we go into a state we take three or four rains with us, but we must have lost our rabbit's foot, for it hasn't rained since we entered the state and it is so hot that a red hot poker would feel like an icicle.

Sherm Fitch is the branch manager for RKO here in Sioux Falls. Sherm is a right nice boy except when he gets you out on the golf course and then he is so doggone ornery that the fleas won't bite him. We are going to drive Sherm over to O'Neill, Nebraska, where he has bought a new Studebaker "Commander" car, and then we are going down home for the weekend to see if our wife's Persian cat has had kittens yet. Our Persian is a great cat. She has long, silky fur and she sleeps in the dough pan of nights and that's what makes our biscuits hold together so well.

We are expecting the mayor to declare a holiday when we get home. The "Silver Cornet Band" will lead the parade, there will be "Welcome to Our City" signs in all the windows and the marshal will permit us to park in front of a fire plug—that is, maybe. But more likely we will be threatened with a court action if we don't pay up our last winter's coal bill and give a bond to keep the peace while we are sojourning within the sacred precincts of our beautiful city, located on the banks of the Elkhorn. Gosh-all-fishhooks, what's this country coming to anyhow.

Next week we are going back to Sioux Falls and drive to South Dakota for a week or ten days with Sherm at the wheel of his new Commander. Sherm has become so chesty that he refuses to ride in April Shower, but April Shower won't care about that, for she is rather choice of her company anyhow.

We note that the producers out in Hollywood have issued an edict that hereafter no dogs will be permitted in the studios. The reason being that recently some pup bit a guy out there and now all dogs are barred. They may say that when a dog bites a man it isn't news, but when a man bites a dog it is entitled to front page space. That's probably why Ramon Novarro bit a pup in "The Barbarian," which was the best "kick" in the picture, but the pup did the most of the kicking.

That edict will be mighty tough on Miss Rexy Clementine, the "toast of Broadway" and "the Idol of the screen," for she will have to leave her darling Fifi at home in the tender care of a couple of maids, two butlers and a janitor, which will be terrible, Abner, simply terrible.

We can't understand why Hollywood pays more attention to pups than they do children. The town is simply overrun with pups, but you seldom see a child out there, that's why we are again extending our congratulations to Mama Louise Fazenda.

We are told that the screen is the greatest educational factor of the age. If that be true then we wonder if the rising generation is to acquire its knowledge of morality, of chastity, of marital sacredness, of purity and common decency from the screen as it is being portrayed in too many instances today. Why not try some Saniflush.

Ever since the HERALD has permitted the publication of this Colyum we have tried to act as the official mouthpiece of something like eight thousand exhibitors, the most of whom we know personally, and we have inveighed against "dirt" and "smut" and "sex" and other objectionable matter on the screen, and we have tried to present the viewpoint of those exhibitors as they see it, and we will leave it to them as to whether or not we have represented them correctly.

We have tried to preach the gospel of clean entertainment as being the life-blood of this business. Twelve thousand box offices of the country are being penalized by too many morbid-minded producers and directors. Saniflush is a great cleanser.

Did you ever know of George Arliss, Lionel Barrymore, May Robson, Marie Dressler, Will Rogers, Irene Rich and a few more playing in cheap, bawdy pictures? And why haven't they? Because they value their reputation too highly. It is only those ballyhooed, three-sheeted, press-agented would-be stars who will lend themselves to the portrayal of such trashy entertainment.

We have traveled far and wide. We believe we know the reaction of the public and of thousands of exhibitors to "dirt" in pictures as well as any man on earth (and this isn't said in a spirit of egotism either) and we would like to have the producers fix this in their minds definitely, that the public and twelve thousand exhibitors can't be wrong.

Out in Hollywood we understand that Zasu Pitts is demanding ten thousand dollars per picture for making two-reel shorts for Paramount. We like that gal Zasu, we think she's a riot, and if there is anyone worth that amount Zasu is, but we don't think anyone is.

Charlie Ruggles has made "Melody Cruise" and we'll betcha it is a dandy. We like that boy Charlie, we always did, but Charlie don't know it, and probably wouldn't care if he did, but he's just our kind of a chap and he can't help himself if we want to like him. This is a free country, 'gosh, and we'll like whoever we darn please. If they never get a better actor on the screen than Charlie it will be all right with us.

When Charlie Ruggles plays a part
He plays it with such zest and vim
That no other star can even start
In playing comedy parts with him.
He'll make you laugh till you can't see
And he'd make a bullfrog climb a tree.

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Allied

SPIRIT OF THE WEST: Hoot Gibson—The best of the six Gibsons I have used and all of them have been satisfactory. Ordinarily a western doesn't appeal to me, but I thoroughly enjoyed this. These westerns with plenty of comedy, as all Gibsons have, are what the small towns need. Had lots of favorable remarks on this.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

Columbia

BITTER TEA OF GENERAL YEN: Barbara Stanwyck—Another good one from Columbia. Splendid acting, but too deep for a small town. Business pretty fair, and we were pleased with this show. Running time, 68 minutes. Played May 28-29-30.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

CORNERED: Tim McCoy—Showed this last part of week to average business, the first two reels a little bad from poor dialogue, but picks up from there on and makes good western picture.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

NO MORE ORCHIDS: Carole Lombard, Lyle Talbot—A very good picture from Columbia. Story good, acting good, and the whole show is very good. We should have more of these pictures. Lombard is the whole show and she is marvelous. Business above average and everybody pleased. Played only one day, but it would stand two days. If you have not played this one, by all means play it on the two best days of the week. Running time, 70 minutes. Played May 31.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SO THIS IS AFRICA: Wheeler and Woolsey—Oh where, oh where has this picture been all my life? I have no criticism to offer you, but please do play it and let your patrons do it for you, and do not fail to ask Mr. Rogers to send you one of Miss Martini's pictures; he promised me one. Good biz, yea. You will do the same. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 4-5-6.—James Augustine, Spa Theatre, Hot Springs, Ark. General patronage.

SOLDIERS OF THE STORM: Regis Toomey, Anita Page—A clean little picture, well acted and pleasing. Drew fairly well. Columbia has some good program pictures, and they seem to draw well. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 10.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

WESTERN CODE, THE: Tim McCoy—Another good western picture from Columbia. McCoy is very good, story good and plenty of action and thrills. Everybody well pleased and business about average. If Columbia could only make features as good as they can westerns, they would be up with the other major companies. Running time, 60 minutes. Played June 3.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

WHEN STRANGERS MARRY: Jack Holt, Lillian Bond—Nice program picture; it will hold interest until the end. Jack and Lillian do some fine acting, and it will please them all. Running time, 65 minutes. Played June 11-12.—James Augustine, Spa Theatre, Hot Springs, Ark. General patronage.

First National

BLONDIE JOHNSON—Joan Blondell, Chester Morris—A very good program picture. Stars good and story interesting. All liked it.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

CENTRAL AIRPORT: Richard Barthelmess, Sally Eilers—Good picture. I never played a bad one with Barthelmess. Sally Eilers excellent in her part as are the other members of the cast.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

LIFE BEGINS: Loretta Young, Eric Linden—Picture appeals particularly to women. Half the men dislike it. It will pay if exploited, and should receive that effort. About average three-day gross with heavy rain first day. Played May 14-16.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban family patronage.

LITTLE GIANT, THE: Edward G. Robinson—Excellent. Another good one from Warners. It's getting to be a habit with this company, and Robinson pictures are among the best.—S. H. Rich. Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

SILVER DOLLAR: Edward G. Robinson—A splendid picture. Robinson has never failed one yet. We think he is great, and so does Warner Bros. Why not? Running time, 78 minutes. Played May 7-8.—James Augustine, Spa Theatre, Hot Springs, Ark. General patronage.

THEY CALL IT SIN: Loretta Young, George Brent—Picture that seemed to please all classes and heard many favorable comments. Used Warners "Meal Ticket" featuring the Baron, with this program, and it was so terrible that it spoiled the show. Played May 25-27.—Orpheum Theatre Kerrobert, Canada. Rural patronage.

THREE ON A MATCH: Joan Blondell, Warren William, Ann Dvorak, Bette Davis—Picture pleased everybody. Business 97 per cent. Played May 21-23.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban family patronage.

TIGER SHARK: Edward G. Robinson—Excellent picture which should interest all classes. Rather morbid and did less than average business here. Played April 20-21-22.—Orpheum Theatre, Kerrobert, Canada. Rural patronage.

20,000 YEARS IN SING SING: Spencer Tracy, Bette Davis—The best prison picture we have played to them that like this kind of entertainment. It gave satisfaction, but I think we have had about enough of prison and hard-boiled pictures, and we now need something entertaining to send them out laughing with a desire to come back. Played June 4-5.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

YOU SAID A MOUTHFUL: Joe E. Brown, Ginger Rogers—Business 110 per cent. Picture good. Played May 28-30.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban family patronage.

YOU SAID A MOUTHFUL: Joe E. Brown—Usual Brown show. Good clean humor. Grossed below average and it seems that Joe Brown has worn out his welcome here. Even the kids don't come to see Joe these days. Played May 11-13.—Orpheum Theatre, Kerrobert, Canada. Rural patronage.

Fox

BROADWAY BAD: Joan Blondell, Ricardo Cortez—Boringly Bad should have been the title. Another from Fox cut over the same pattern, the Broadway star falling for the small town boy, the inevitable baby and the fight for possession, and in the trial heroic Cortez taking the blame and they were happy ever after.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—Comments divided. Quite a few panned it and still others praised it highly. Personally I would rate it just fair. Drew just average business and the average now is terrible.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—Good patronage. This is a fine picture. We need more of this kind to help business. Good for any night.—Hubert Ellison, Pastime Theatre, Protection, Kan. Small town patronage.

CAVALCADE: This is a big production, but did not go over due to foreign atmosphere and English dialect which was hard to understand. Some pleased, but majority did not care for it. Business on this no more than normal. Running time, 110 minutes. Played May 14-15-16-17.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

CAVALCADE: All star. Fox calls it a big picture. I say very ordinary and a skin game to get extra money for it. Had I seen it before making a deal, would not have had it at any price. To my situation an ordinary program picture, made less desirable on account of length. Lost money on the run. Running time, 109 minutes. Played May 28-30.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

CAVALCADE: Clive Brook, Diana Wynyard—"Picture of the Generation." It's as big as life itself, One of the greatest pictures of all time. Personally, I think it perfect in every respect except sound. The recording is off, and very hard to understand. It's a masterpiece of the very first class, and deserves a place among the best. I have no words that can express the magnitude and perfection of this wonderful picture. All I can say is that it is a perfect picture, portraying a period in the history of England and the world. The cast with the exception of Clive Brook are unknown and yet each character in their part are as good as Brook. The picture is 100 per cent English, and every word spoken has the natural English accent; therefore, does not appeal to the average theatre fan. In fact, fully half the people in small towns, and I believe large towns, also, will not care for the picture, because of the English cast and talk. The picture started big and fell very low the second and third day. Many people told me it was absolutely no good. I think it will be a failure as a box office attraction in the small towns, but regardless of this I say it's a great picture, and it's clean. It's an honor for a theatre to play a picture of this kind even if they lose money. I spent two years in England, and I know the English people and can appreciate a perfect picture like "Cavalcade." Played June 4-5-6.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

GOLDEN WEST, THE: George O'Brien—Best western we have had this year and we have used quite a number. The box office, however, didn't get any extra exercise even though we stepped on this as we used it to open a new serial.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

GOLDEN WEST, THE: George O'Brien—A very good western that went over great. Ran this on Family Night, to the best house for months. Fine entertainment for the western fans. Running time, 74 minutes. Played May 24-25.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebannon, Kan. Small town patronage.

PLEASURE CRUISE: Genevieve Tobin, Roland Young—Below average. Fox is not holding up as well on their program this year. It it wasn't for "State Fair," "Call Her Savage," "Congorilla," "Face in the Sky," "Too Busy to Work," "Adorable," "Fox would be a washout. "Pleasure Cruise" is just a picture, that's all.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

SAILOR'S LUCK: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—Sammy Cohen steals the show. This is a good evening's entertainment and was enjoyed by every one.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

STATE FAIR: Will Rogers, Janet Gaynor—It's a distinct pleasure to be able, in my feeble way, to add words of well deserved praise to the thousands that have been bestowed on this clean, wholesome and 100% enjoyable production. No need here to try to build up a fictitious and inflated adult patronage by stating "Not for Children." There was entertainment, plus, for all ages, ranging from first to second childhood. Real human life, without being raw. Not highbrow, but nevertheless big. Fox Corporation should and no doubt does feel proud of this production. I should, and most certainly do, feel proud of having given this to my patrons, who should, and have so advised me, do, feel that they received 100% on their investment. The members of this cast, including "Blue Boy," fitted into their parts like the proverbial glove. And Fox permitted me to retain some of the net profits, which as you know does not always happen. Running time, 100 minutes. Played May 28-29.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Exceptionally well received. Many many excellent comments. Proved to be one of the most popular pictures I have run for many months. Considered here the best Gaynor-Farrell since "High Society Blues."—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers—Rogers in a different role that is very fine. This is easily one of the best pictures of the past year. Excellent story and a world of philosophy that nearly every one can grasp. If I was writing this for "Liberty," this show would get four stars.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

TRICK FOR TRICK: Ralph Morgan, Victor Jory—Not much of a show. Played May 30-31.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

WARRIOR'S HUSBAND, THE: Elissa Landi—Some liked it; thought it was good comedy; others didn't care for it. Business average. Running time, 75 minutes. Played June 2-3.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

YOUNG AMERICA: Spencer Tracy—Passed this up

last year, but after reading a lot of good reports decided to use it. Exhibitor Rich of Montpelier, Idaho, in the Herald of May 27 gave this a report that expresses my sentiments exactly. It is certainly a great little family show. If you passed this up last year don't lose any time booking it in.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

ZOO IN BUDAPEST: Loretta Young, Gene Raymond—Very ordinary picture, although contains beautiful photography. Nice love story. Drags considerably from start up to last couple of reels. Business below normal. Running time, 85 minutes. Played May 28-29-30.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

ZOO IN BUDAPEST Gene Raymond, Loretta Young—A fair Saturday picture on account of the animals. Some good shots of fowl. Photography good. Loretta Young, 18-year-old girl from an orphanage, the dumbest 18-year-old girl I ever saw. Miss Young deserves better parts and better director. Picture is clean, nothing objectionable. Played June 3.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Mayfair

HELL'S HEADQUARTERS: Jack Mulhall—Played this without advertising on a Saturday night, due to disappointment in not receiving prints booked. Here is a little independent picture that pleased every one who saw it, and made us enough to eat the next day. That's good. Running time, 58 minutes. Played May 27.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

MGM

DEVIL'S BROTHER, THE: Laurel & Hardy, Dennis King—This is very good; pleased 90 per cent. Average business. Running time, 92 minutes. Played June 2-3.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

FAST LIFE: William Haines, Madge Evans—A good action picture with good comedy and gave satisfaction on a double bill.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

FAST LIFE: William Haines—Best Haines has made for some time. Cliff Edwards as good as Haines. Pleased every one and drew good business. Running time, 75 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

GABRIEL OVER THE WHITE HOUSE: Walter Huston—Very good show; pleased 75 cent. For some reason, didn't get rental on this. Running time, 87 minutes. Played June 5-6.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

MADE ON BROADWAY: Robert Montgomery, Sally Eilers—A very good picture from Metro. Montgomery is the whole show, but both Sally Eilers and Madge Evans are very good. Business good and everybody well pleased. We advise you to play this one two days or longer. This is the first picture from Metro in quite a while that has pleased our patronage and we hope that there will be more like it. Running time, 70 minutes. Played May 29-30.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

NUISANCE, THE: Lee Tracy, Madge Evans—Just another program picture from Metro. Tracy is very good in his role as a trickster lawyer and Madge Evans is more lovely than ever. This is good entertainment for old and young. Wherever Tracy is liked it should do a good business. Here he does not draw. If you have a Family Day, by all means play it on that day as it is good clean entertainment. Running time, 80 minutes. Played June 6.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SECRET OF MADAME BLANCHE, THE: Irene Dunne, Phillips Holmes—Just another picture from Metro. Good for one day only. From previous write-ups we thought this would be a big flop, but it turned out to be a fairly good program picture and business about average. There are too many sad scenes in this one and that is what killed the picture. Acting by Irene Dunne and Phillips Holmes very good and the show as a whole pleased every one. Running time, 80 minutes. Played June 5.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

TODAY WE LIVE: Joan Crawford, Gary Cooper—War, tears, noise, more tears, fog, rain, no business.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

WHISTLING IN THE DARK: Ernest Truex, Una Merkel—A picture that pleased all who saw it. Ernest Truex is not known here, but gives a very good performance. Una Merkel popular here. Running time, 78 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

WHISTLING IN THE DARK: Ernest Truex, Una Merkel—Another flop from Metro. Truex unknown in our community and Merkel has no drawing power. Had several walkouts on this one and as a whole the audience was not pleased. Metro has had several flops this season, but perhaps the others will make up the loss. By all means do not play this over one day. Only fair entertainment. Running time, 78 minutes. Played midnight show, May 28.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

WHITE SISTER, THE: Clark Gable, Helen Hayes—Mighty good picture. It's refreshing to have a good clean story with love interest again. Played June 4-5.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

WHITE SISTER, THE: Clark Gable, Helen Hayes—Wonderful acting, good picture, fair business.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

WHITE SISTER, THE: Helen Hayes, Clark Gable—Excellent. Should go over anywhere. Pleased 90 per cent. Running time, 101 minutes. Played June 9-10.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BEDTIME STORY, A.: Maurice Chevalier—Did more than ordinary business on this. Everyone pleased. Baby LeRoy helped this one. Also helped by good comedy by Edward Everett Horton. Picture very good. Good Sunday picture. Running time, 86 minutes. Played May 7-8-9-10.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

BEDTIME STORY, A.: Maurice Chevalier.—A very fine production. Has all the elements of entertainment. Every one enjoyed it. More like it, please. Running time, 86 minutes. Played June 4-6.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

CRIME OF THE CENTURY: Stuart Erwin, Wynne Gibson.—I've seen a lot of crime and mystery stories but I've never seen one that was as interesting as this picture. The know-it-all reporter is portrayed by Erwin and he certainly knows how. The rest of the cast do remarkably well and turn out a fine picture. Drew extra good business and sent them home happy. Running time, 75 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

EAGLE AND THE HAWK, THE: Fredric March, Cary Grant—Among the best airplane pictures released. Press book contains wonderful exploitation stunts, which we used to build up a good business for four nights. Running time, 72 minutes. Played June 4-5-6-7.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

FAREWELL TO ARMS, A: Gary Cooper, Helen Hayes—Did not hear many comments about this, but box office showed up very nicely. Running time, 90 minutes. Played June 8-9.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

FROM HELL TO HEAVEN: Jack Oakie, Carole Lombard—Only fair entertainment. Mixture of murder and horse racing. Oakie gave a sorry performance and due to the fact that he is not liked here, many people stayed away. Why, oh why do they keep making pictures and putting the murder angle in them? People want to laugh and keep happy through these trying times but there is always something to make the pictures sad. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 2.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

GIRLS ABOUT TOWN: Kay Francis, Joel McCrea, Lilyan Tashman—Picture mostly comedy and good for midweek. Business average. Played May 17-18.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban family patronage.

HERITAGE OF THE DESERT: Randolph Scott—Western picture nicely done. Business average with vaudeville. Played May 19-20.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban family patronage.

INTERNATIONAL HOUSE: Peggy Hopkins Joyce, W. C. Fields, Stuart Erwin, Burns and Allen.—On same order as "Big Broadcast" but this picture has more comedy and more action. Snappy all the way through. Business way above average. Running time, 67 minutes. Played June 11-12-13-14.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

KING OF THE JUNGLE: Buster Crabbe, Frances Dee—Clean, entertaining tale of the jungle, shifting to circus. Used this as a benefit tieup with Parent-Teachers' organization. Was O.K. for that or any other showing. Played May 17-18.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

KING OF THE JUNGLE: Buster Crabbe, Frances Dee—Did good business despite three days' downpour of rain. Picture that will please young and old alike, it has thrills, romance, plenty of excitement. Will stand extra advertising. Good picture for any day of the week. Played May 11-12-13.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

KING OF THE JUNGLE: Buster Crabbe—An exceedingly good picture of the Tarzan variety. If your patrons like lots of wild animals and excitement feed them this one. Business was big and everyone seemed satisfied. Running time, 74 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

LADY'S PROFESSION, A.: Alison Skipworth—Very entertaining program picture. Not much drawing power, but will please the ones that come. Running time, 72 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

LADY AND GENT: George Bancroft—A very fine production and full of entertainment. Running time, 85 minutes. Played May 31.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

MADAME BUTTERFLY: Sylvia Sidney—Even Ruggles can't make this go over. Used this on a Sun.-Mon. Opened very bad and almost nothing the second night ($3.90 to be exact).—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

MYSTERIOUS RIDER, THE: Kent Taylor—A good western that gave me the second best Saturday's business in over a year. Very easy to ballyhoo. I dressed up a boy in a black robe and let him ride a horse all over the community and this created quite a lot of interest in the picture. Only kick that I had that it was not long enough. Running time, 57 minutes.—H. B. Schuessler (Martin Theatres), LaFayette Theatre, LaFayette, Ala. Small town patronage.

NO MAN OF HER OWN: Clark Gable, Carole Lombard—An unusual story to begin with and that is what they say they want. Story sustains interest, stars are more than capable. Showed this first half of week to poorest business in past six weeks. Weather is so hot it is intolerable.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

NO MAN OF HER OWN: Clark Gable—Here's a surprise. Unexpected business came in on this. Did not think it would appeal here, but had a good house each night. Acting splendid, but we thought the story weak. Running time, 80 minutes. Played May 25-26.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

SHE DONE HIM WRONG: Mae West—It is my opinion that Mae West is the only one that could have gotten away with this picture. A light of love and what a light of love. There is a paucity of story, very weak, in fact, disjointed direction. Only this glamorous actress with her husky tough voice could have carried such a weak story and gotten away with it, but they liked her and she will be looked for in her next picture.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SIGN OF THE CROSS: Charles Laughton, Claudette Colbert, Fredric March, Elissa Landi—As all of DeMille's pictures they are about four reels too long. There is too much stress on agony. Many sequences could have been cut short, especially where they were torturing the boy (Stephanie in the cast). This scene the agony was revolting to many, and three women with children walked out on it. At that scene. Then the march of the Christians was entirely too long. Fredric March, Elissa Landi and Claudette Colbert gave outstanding performances. The picture is too gruesome to rank as the biggest of DeMille's. It has not the beauty of "The Ten Commandments" and it is my guess that it will fail at the box office in most small towns as it did here. The gross fault of the picture is that it takes the story too long to develop, DeMille's yen for detail spoils it as big audience value.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SONG OF THE EAGLE: Charles Bickford, Mary Brian, Richard Arlen—Holds interest throughout, a man's picture. Played June 1-2.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SONG OF THE EAGLE: Richard Arlen—Beer, beer and more beer. Made the mistake of playing it on Sunday. Would be OK for midweek.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

STORY OF TEMPLE DRAKE, THE: Miriam Hopkins—Advance reviews made us rather afraid to put this picture on best nights, so booked it in the middle of the week. Sorry didn't play this on my best nights as we did a very nice business, second night better than the first and could have played three nights, as picture got good word of mouth advertising. Although picture is strictly adult entertainment, it is not offensive as we were led to believe. Running time, 71 minutes. Played May 31-June 1.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

STRANGERS IN LOVE: Fredric March, Kay Francis—Business 90 per cent. Picture very satisfactory. Played May 31-June 1.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban family patronage.

SUNSET PASS: Randolph Scott—A good Zane Grey western. Always please here. Running time, 65 minutes. Played June 7-8.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

TERROR ABOARD: Charles Ruggles, Neil Hamilton—Our people fed up on this type of picture long ago. Running time, 65 minutes. Played May 31-June 1.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

TONIGHT IS OURS: Claudette Colbert, Fredric March—Very good romantic drama. The picture is ordinary but will please. Drew good business. I have noticed quite an increase in business since the first of March. I believe conditions are improving, and believe me we all need it. Running time, 78 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

UNDER COVER MAN: George Raft—A sort of gangster picture that has some very clever angles and is most interesting from beginning to end. While business for the last half of week was off, believe reason for this is terrific hot weather.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

UNDER THE TONTO RIM: Stuart Erwin—Not as good as the other Zane Greys that Paramount have released but will draw and satisfy. Paramount are to be congratulated on their product as they haven't made a poor one yet. Running time, 59 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

WOMAN ACCUSED, THE: Nancy Carroll, Cary Grant—Good all around picture.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

RKO

DIPLOMANIACS: Wheeler & Woolsey—Just fair. In my estimation, their poorest. Not a special, in fact ordinary, very ordinary. Running time, 60 minutes. Played May 21-23.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

GOLDIE GETS ALONG: Lili Damita—Just film. Running time, 66 minutes. Played May 24-25.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

HALF-NAKED TRUTH, THE: Lee Tracy—About the average for RKO this season. This makes a satisfactory mid-week or Fri.-Sat. show. RKO has made a number of good shows this year but they just don't draw.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

OUR BETTERS: Constance Bennett—Too much English environment and too much talk to please the average small town patron. About the weakest thing Connie has offered in a long, long time. Had a good many walkouts, and the ones that sat through were only waiting to see the news and cartoon. Running time, 72 minutes.—H. B. Schuessler (Martin Theatres), LaFayette Theatre, LaFayette, Ala. Small town patronage.

PENGUIN POOL MURDER: Edna May Oliver—Poor business. This picture has a poor plot and murder stories have had their day here. This picture has nothing in it that it takes to draw good crowd.—Hubert Ellison, Pastime Theatre, Protection, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SAILOR BE GOOD: Jack Oakie—This must have been a good picture before the censors cut it to pieces. It didn't make good sense with what was left of it. Excellent business, however, so we are satisfied. Good comments. Print in rather poor condition, which is unusual for RKO. Running time, 68 minutes. Played June 3-4.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

STRANGE JUSTICE: Marian Marsh, R. Denny—Just another program picture. Some said good, some said no good, and there you are.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SWEEPINGS: Lionel Barrymore—Very good.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

Tiffany

SUNSET TRAIL: Ken Maynard—Good western and average business. Played May 26-27.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban family patronage.

RED HAIRED ALIBI: Merna Kennedy—A good entertaining picture. Played as a double bill with "Fargo Express" and was a satisfactory show. Had both quantity and quality.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

United Artists

KID FROM SPAIN, THE: Eddie Cantor—To the exhibitors who think the good old days are gone for good, play this and you'll change your mind. The public knows a good picture and is willing to spend their money for what it wants.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

SECRETS: Mary Pickford, Leslie Howard—This is a clean picture that did ordinary business. Nothing unusual about this. If your patrons like Mary Pickford, it will please. Running time, 84 minutes. Played May 21-22-23.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

Universal

COHENS AND KELLYS IN HOLLYWOOD: George Sidney, Charles Murray—Very good comedy feature. Business average. Played May 24-25.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban family patronage.

FIGHTING PRESIDENT, THE: A flop. This is a very poor picture and did no business for me.—Hubert Ellison, Pastime Theatre, Protection, Kansas. Small town patronage.

FOURTH HORSEMAN, THE: Tom Mix—This is one of Tom's best westerns. Went over big with our kids and rural patrons. Sound good, acting good and directing good. Played June 9-10.—Amuzu Theatre, Inc., Inman, S. C. General town and country patronage.

KISS BEFORE THE MIRROR: Gloria Stuart, Nancy Carroll, Paul Lukas, Frank Morgan—We have never run a better picture at this theatre. The work of Frank Morgan and Paul Lukas was particularly outstanding. Nancy Carroll was all that could have been asked. You need not be afraid to take this one on. If James Whale ever gave better directing we have yet to see it. Played June 12-13.—Amuzu Theatre, Inc., Inman, S. C. General town and country patronage.

MY PAL, THE KING: Tom Mix—A good Mix that did not draw as well as other Mixes I have played. Possibly due to free show competition nearby. —L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

DANCE "MANIA" IN CARTOON COMEDIES

Herman J. Brown of the Majestic and Adelaide theatres at Nampa, Idaho, rises to ask a question regarding cartoon comedies. Writes Brown: "Will they never quit making everything dance in these comedies? Since the first Disney, the cartoon comedy makers have the dance mania. The public is fed up with it."

OKAY AMERICA: Lew Ayres—A very good newspaper-gangster type of picture. However, was no draw at the box.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

OLD DARK HOUSE, THE: Karloff—Nothing to it. Never should be taken out of the can. Running time, 72 minutes. Played June 7-8.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

PRIVATE JONES: Lee Tracy—Flopped here, but a good picture. Tracy hurt himself in "Clear All Wires" and our patrons asked before they bought a ticket if it was any better.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

RIDER OF DEATH VALLEY: Tom Mix—Western well done with good cast. Business 110 per cent. Played June 2-3.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban family patronage.

TEXAS BAD MAN: Tom Mix—Good western. Mix still stands them out. Put this on my bargain night and it looked like old times. Business 50 per cent increase.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

Warner

42ND STREET: Warner Baxter, Bebe Daniels, George Brent, Ruby Keeler—The best show I have run for a long time. Attendance was not so large as it should have been, owing to the fact that it had been run in an adjoining town three days ahead, and also in another adjoining town about six weeks ago. This show pleased 100 per cent plus. Not one unfavorable criticism. Don't hesitate to step on the advertising. You can't over-advertise this one. Running time, 89 minutes. Played June 3-4-5.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

42ND STREET: Warner Baxter, Bebe Daniels, George Brent, Ruby Keeler—Very good. Did above average business. Running time, 89 minutes. Played May 29-30.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

GIRL MISSING: Glenda Farrell—A real picture. Pleased 100 per cent. This girl Glenda Farrell is welcome here anytime. Running time, 68 minutes. Played June 11.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

GIRL MISSING: Glenda Farrell, Ben Lyon—A very interesting picture from start to finish. Another murder-mystery picture, but our patrons are fed up on them and business not so good. Why do the producers continue to make the type of pictures that the public do not want? We would advise you to play this one day and try to get by on it. Story good but nobody likes them. Running time, 72 minutes. Played June 1.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

I AM A FUGITIVE FROM A CHAIN GANG: Paul Muni—Truly a splendid picture. Story gripping and acting very good. However crime pictures are out here and this turned out to be one of the biggest box office flops although I paid special prices on it. Played June 8-10.—Orpheum Theatre, Kerrobert, Canada. Rural patronage.

KEYHOLE, THE: Kay Francis, George Brent—A very nice program picture. Good acting, story interesting to the young folks. The few we got in on it were satisfied. Very slow and no drawing power. Played June 6-7.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

KING'S VACATION, THE: George Arliss—A wonderful picture. Why is it that people will turn out to see some picture that is punk, and when a real picture such as "King's Vacation" with George Arliss comes along, they pass it up. Did not make rental, three days. Guess it is too high class for my town. We liked it, even if we did lose money on it. Running time, 63 minutes. Played June 4-5-6.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

PARACHUTE JUMPER: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Bette Davis—A keen film. Doug. Jr. gets better and better all the time, and how my patrons like him! He is my personal favorite among the younger stars. Can't see how Joan could let him go. In this he has nice support from Bette Davis and funny Frank McHugh. "Swell entertainment" was the verdict of an average Saturday night crowd. Romance and air thrills is what you have to sell here, and good shorts of any sort can be played with it. Can anyone tell me the name of the theme song used in the background of this picture? It is the same one that was used throughout "Cabin in the Cotton." Warner's have certainly put out a real line-up of films this season—hardly a lemon in a corload. Sure hope they repeat next fall!—Roland H. Viner, Morris Theatre, Morris, Ill. General patronage.

RIDE HIM COWBOY: John Wayne—Good western. My people sure eat up these westerns on my bargain night. Business way above average.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

SO BIG: Barbara Stanwyck—Played this a little late, but am sorry I held it back, it pleased most every one. Stanwyck is still good card here, and she should be in any state. Very fine acting. Running time, 75 minutes. Played June 7-8.—James Augustine, Spa Theatre, Hot Springs, Ark. General patronage.

SUCCESSFUL CALAMITY, A.: George Arliss—Fine show, acting very good, and a dandy story. Mr. Arliss is a great actor. Average biz. and that is darn good nowadays. Played May 21-22.—James Augustine, Spa Theatre, Hot Springs, Ark. General patronage.

TELEGRAPH TRAIL, THE: John Wayne—Just a dandy western. Not too much of any one thing. A splendid story well told. Nearly a second "Covered Wagon." Should please any place on earth where outdoor pictures are shown.—Ned Pedigo, De Luxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. Small town patronage.

UNTAMED AFRICA: Good jungle picture. Real scenes. Sponsored by National Geographic. Worth running. Tie up with school to put it over. Voice off stage explains situations, but roaring of animals heard OK.—Philip Rand, Rex Theatre, Salmon, Idaho. General patronage.

WAX MUSEUM, MYSTERY OF THE: Glenda Farrell, Lionel Atwill—A horror picture in color that everyone seemed to like and the young folks thought great. Personally I do not like horror pictures but this one is good. Glenda Farrell steals the show, as always. Glenda is box office here. Beautiful color effects. Running time, 72 minutes. Played May 27-28.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

World Wide

FARGO EXPRESS: Ken Maynard—Good western. Played as a double bill with "Red Haired Alibi" and was a satisfactory show. Had both quantity and quality.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

COLLEGE GIGOLOS: Sunrise Comedy—Another sorry comedy from Columbia. Only one good scene in entire two reels. No story and acting very poor. It is a certainty that Columbia cannot make two-reel comedies. In our opinion, they should discontinue making two-reel comedies. Running time, 17 minutes. —J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

CURSE OF A BROKEN HEART, THE: Sunrise Comedy—So rotten that it was good. This kind of comedy may get laughs in the big towns, but they can't get a wrinkle here.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

CURSE OF A BROKEN HEART: A burlesque on the oldtime "Meller-drammer" that pleased our crowd. Cleaner than most of Columbia's comedies, and one of the best we have received from them. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

FARE PLAY: Scrappy Cartoon—A very good cartoon comedy. Music good and contains many laughs. Columbia certainly has good cartoons and they are what our patrons like. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LADIES NOT ALLOWED: Lambs Gambols—The Lambs may be nice Lambs on the stage, but as far as the screen is concerned, the industry would be better off if "Ladies Not Allowed" would be the last Lambs Gambols comedy. Running time, 17 minutes. —J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LAMBS ALL STAR GAMBOL—Without a doubt the worst so-called comedy we have shown. Not even a smile in it. Some of the younger fellows left the theatre to go out for a smoke until this thing blew over. Customers hunted me up after the show and told me how rotten it was. Was going to shelve the rest of the Lambs Gambols after running this, but will try another, with the hope that they won't get worse.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

MICKEY'S REVUE: Mickey Mouse—All of Columbia's Mickey Mouse cartoons are as good as money can buy. Running time, 8 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

MINSTREL SHOW, THE: Krazy Kat Kartoon—

Another very good musical cartoon from Columbia. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

RED MEN TELL NO TALES: Eddie Buzzell—The best short we have received from Columbia except Mickey Mouse. Caused many favorable comments. Running time, 1 reel.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

SUNRISE COMEDIES: No matter which you run, they are all bad. Columbia better stick to pictures and let the comedy market alone. We have run four to date and every one bad. That's a record to tie to. —A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Educational

AS THE CROWS FLY: Moran and Mack—Just as good a slapstick comedy as anybody would want to see. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

COCKY COCK ROACH: Terry-Toon—Clever cartoon.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

FOR THE LOVE OF LUDWIG: Andy Clyde—We thought this only fair. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HITCH HIKER, THE: Harry Langdon—Not as funny as the star's previous comedies, but got by to a few hearty laughs. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Master Art

MOTHER'S MELODIES: Organlogue—Just passable.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban family patronage.

SING WITH THE STREET SINGER: Arthur Tracy—Organlogue. Satisfactory.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban family patronage.

MGM

CHARLEY CHASE COMEDIES: They are not so good this year by many a mile. What's gone wrong? —Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

CIRCUS: Flip the Frog Cartoon—A fair cartoon. Does not compare with Mickey Mouse or Krazy Kat. Running time, 6 minutes.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Rural patronage.

CUCKOO THE MAGICIAN: Flip the Frog Cartoon—Will get box office, although there is not much entertainment to it.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

FALLEN ARCHES: Charlie Chase—Patrons seemed to enjoy this one.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SONG PARADE: Lew White—Organlogue. Not worth much to us.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban family patronage.

FREE WHEELING: Our Gang—The Our Gang comedies have been very poor, but this is exceptionally good. Lots of action.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

KID FROM BORNEO, THE: Our Gang—A very funny kid comedy.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MAIDS A LA MODE: Thelma Todd, Zasu Pitts—Fair. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Cape Charles, Va. Small town patronage.

MR. BRIDE: Charley Chase—Another Charley Chase comedy from Metro. Only fair entertainment. Story very poor and audience did not like it. If Chase is to continue making comedies Metro had better get better stories for him or he will be the biggest flop of the comedians. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MUSH AND MILK: Our Gang—Average Our Gang comedy. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Cape Charles, Va. Small town patronage.

NOW WE'LL TELL ONE: Charlie Chase—Charlie wears a belt in this one which endows him with characteristics not his own—classical dancer, prize fighter, sheik, etc. Not bad. My patrons like to have Charlie sing and dance.—Mrs. Howard Maylor, Oak Harbor Theatre, Oak Harbor, Wash. General patronage.

THE NURSEMAID: Flip the Frog—"The Nursemaid" is not up to the standard of cartoons. Flip has seen his best days and we hope that they will be discontinued next year or will be greatly improved. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theate, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

OVER THE COUNTER: Colortone Musical Revue —Beautifully colored two-reeler, plenty of girls, clever plot, but too snappy in spots for a small town, although most of our patrons seemed to like it.—Mrs. G. C. Moore, American Theatre, Harlowton, Mont. Small town patronage.

RED NOSES: Pitts-Todd—Seemed to please. Got a number of good laughs. Picture old and print in very poor condition.—Marion F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Rural patronage.

ROOSEVELT, THE MAN OF THE HOUR: Not much to this, just old newsreel shots of Roosevelt. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Cape Charles, Va. Small town patronage.

RUMMY, THE: Taxi Boys—Not much to this. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

SCHOOL DAYS: Flip the Frog—A clever cartoon that pleased all the kiddies and most of the elders.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

TOY PARADE, THE: Oddity—A very clever oddity from Metro. Very good for children, but the adults did not care much for it. We suggest that you play it at kiddies' matinee if you have them; if not, any other time that you have a good child attendance. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

TROUT FISHING: Fisherman's Paradise—Better than usual sports reel.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban family patronage.

WHISPERING BILL: Chas. (Chic) Sale—Excellent for feature night filler.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BABBLING BOOK: Burns and Allen—Patron's remark, "They're crazy, but I nearly laughed myself to death."—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban family patronage.

BETTY BOOP'S KER-CHOO: Betty Boop—A very good cartoon comedy from Paramount. Betty Boop is just a little different from the others and as a rule they are all very good. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BETTY BOOP'S KER-CHOO: Betty Boop—Very good. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

DENTIST, THE: W. C. Fields—A funny two-reeler, that was rather resented by the dental profession in this town. Lots of laughs from my customers. Running time, 18 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

DINAH: Mills Bros.—Fair, but sound track not very good. Could hardly understand them at times. Running time, 8 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

HAWAIIAN FANTASY: Vincent Lopez—A dandy subject, good music, pleased everybody. Running time, 7 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE: No. 2—No excuse for this one. Print in bad shape. Not funny. These "Hollywood on Parade" do not seem to take with our customers. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE NO. 7: Not so good as other numbers in this series. Running time, one reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE: No. 9—Good filler.— D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MOONLIGHT FANTASY: Vincent Lopez and his orchestra—Outstanding as a musical reel and everybody liked it. Running time, one reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MUSICAL JUSTICE: Rudy Valee—All right, but didn't thrill any one. They are so hungry for a little music, however, that they welcome even the just fair ones.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban family patronage.

OLOHA OE: Royal Samoans—Fair.—J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIAL: No. 10—Excellent.— J. J. Hoffman, Plainview Theatre, Plainview, Neb. General patronage.

PEANUT VENDOR, THE: Armida—Clever singing and dancing by this dainty star. It's a Screen Song and the cartoon part is also good. Running time, one reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

POPULAR MELODIES: Screen Song with Arthur Jarrett—His singing is good. Cartoon portion fair.— D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

ROBOT, THE: Cartoon—Audience seemed to like it. Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban family patronage.

ROOKIE, THE: Tom Howard—This comedy from Paramount is terrible. No story, and acting is very poor. We had quite a few kicks on it and we would suggest that Paramount discontinue making Tom Howard comedies. Do not play it if you can get out of it. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SNOW-WHITE: Betty Boop—Clever cartoon that features "Saint James Infirmary Blues" sung by Cab Calloway. I featured this in my advertising and believe that it helped.—H. B. Schuessler (Martin Theatres), LaFayette Theatre, LaFayette, Ala. Small town patronage.

TEN DOLLARS OR TEN DAYS: Eddie Younger and His Mountaineers—Just fair mountaineer type musical one reel.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban family patronage.

TIME ON MY HANDS: Ethel Merman—Good. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

RKO

DIZZY DAY, A: Aesop Fable—Nothing to it. Poorest fables I ever run.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

DRUGGIST'S DILEMMA, THE: Clark & McCullough—A fairly good comedy. Will get by.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

HOCUM HOTEL: Aesop Fable—Good. Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

HOCUS POCUS: Clark & McCullough—A two-reel comedy so bad it was good slapstick in the worst way.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

ICE MAN'S BALL: Clark and McCullough—We think these are about the best slapsticks we get. Pleased 100 per cent, and lots of favorable comments. Running time, 18 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

MAGIC ART: Fable—A little better than usual cartoon.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban family patronage.

HEY, POP: Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle—Billed this heavily, as Fatty's first talkie and I believe the comedy drew almost as many as the feature. Good. Running time, 18 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town and rural patronage.

MOVIE DUMB: The Naggers—Satisfactory one reeler.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban family patronage.

RUN AROUND, THE: William Demarest—A two reel comedy. Just a wrinkle.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

WAY OF ALL FRESHMEN: Hal LeRoy, Mitzi Mayfair—Excellent. Pleased 100%. This is the type of shorts that click here. Here's hoping they make more of this type. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Cape Charles, Va. Small town patronage.

Single Feature Policy Losing on Coast: Freuler

Single feature agitation on the West Coast is reaching the stage where results will determine the future of those exhibitors in favor of double-billing, according to John R. Freuler, president of Freuler Film Associates, now in Hollywood getting ready for the 1933-34 season. Mr. Freuler wrote from the Coast this week that receipts have dropped 20 to 40 per cent in many instances under the single feature policy.

"Exchange men and others close to theatre operation have told me that despite a concerted campaign in key cities to secure written agreements with exhibitors to run single bills only, there is growing realization that the double bill is an operating necessity," Mr. Freuler wrote. "The Mirror theatre in Hollywood was doing a profitable business with double features, but it was forced to close three weeks after conforming to a single feature policy."

Mr. Freuler said many other Coast exhibitors were closing their doors because of a drop in patronage since the elimination of double billing in California.

Substitute Operator Wins Full Pay in Court

A verdict of $1,455 was awarded last week by a circuit court jury at Atlantic City, N. J., to John J. Ratty, motion picture operator, against Raymond Reckard, business agent of the local union. Mr. Ratty went to work at the Warner theatre Oct. 15, 1930, as substitute for Mr. Reckard, who was to conduct a campaign against allegedly unfair theatres. Ratty was paid $72.50 by the theatre and was required to pay Reckard $47.50 weekly for use as a campaign fund. Ratty said he was assured by Reckard that he would be reimbursed later by the union.

In 1931 there was a net profit of $1,584,256, equivalent after preferred 7 per cent dividends to $5.25 a share on the 264,206 shares of $25 par common.

Distributors Will Appeal Los Angeles Restraint Case

Practically all distributors involved, including MGM, Universal, First National and Fox, are expected to appeal a lower court ruling in Los Angeles denying their motion for a new trial in the restraint of trade action brought by Fae Robison of Inglewood. The plaintiff had charged that the distributors had forced her theatre into the second run division. An original judgment of $39,000 had been awarded.

"It has been called to the attention of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer that the industry has been circularized by the Metro Sales Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, a firm whose business operations include buying and selling of theatres. This firm has no connection whatsoever with the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer organization," a recent MGM statement said.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Chicago's thousands of World Fair visitors will be augmented during July by plenty of folk from the industry when the parade of motion picture conventions gets underway. On June 29 Universal opens its Eastern and Western division conclave at the Congress. On the same date Paramount managers and salesmen from the Middlewest and Canada inaugurate their sales meeting at the Drake. Next will be Monogram salesmen and bookers from half a dozen midwest cities meeting July 13 and 14. Then, on July 17, United Artists opens its national convention at the Drake. And, to round out the convention schedule for the month, the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association will convene at the Stevens beginning July 28.

Jack Thoma, divisional publicity director for Columbia, was caught in one of his brief stops at the local exchange. With "Cocktail Hour" and "What Price Innocence" on his schedule, Thoma was here just long enough to say "hello" and then left for Cincinnati and Cleveland, with Atlantic City as his ultimate destination to take part in the Columbia sales convention there.

Percy Barr and Harry Goldberg are new members of the Fox sales force handling Educational product. Barr is covering the city territory while Goldberg is handling the country.

J. P. Seman, formerly in the motion picture business and more recently the head of his own advertising agency, has joined the staff of Filmack Trailer Company.

R. H. Cochrane, Universal vice-president, was in town to confer with Henry Herbel.

Henry Ellman has a number of tenants with him in his new quarters on the third floor at 831 S. Wabash. Among those located in the offices are A. R. Johnson, representative in Chicago and the northwest for RCA, A. H. McLaughlin, who is handling the screen contest for Universal and the World's Fair, and D. H. Finke, head of Midwest Ticket and Supply Company.

Wallace Mayer, formerly office manager at the United Artists exchange, has been appointed office manager of the local office of Exhibitors Screen Service by George West.

Jack Miller was called to New York by the executive committee of the MPTOA to sit in on the conferences in connection with the drafting of the new industry code.

A check-up among local exchanges indicates that a number of companies will increase their sales staffs. RKO already has five new men lined up, but, as in the instance of other exchanges, confirmation is being withheld until sales conventions are set.

World's Fair visitors: Miss Jean Dressler, secretary to Jack Cohn of Columbia, and Adolph Pollak, president of Eagle Productions.

Most encouraging is the change in opinions that perhaps the World's Fair won't mean box office suicide. Following the 10 day hot spell business picked up noticeably and a wave of optimism succeeded the gloom of the three preceding weeks.

Deaf and Dumb Hear Knute Rockne at Last

The convention of the American Medical Association at Milwaukee, for a demonstration of the bone conduction hearing unit invented by Hugo Lieber, was the objective of Dan D. Halpin, executive assistant to Mr. Lieber. The medics came, saw and heard, but Mr. Halpin's real visit was on a call from the St. John's School for the Deaf and Dumb. They wanted to hear one of the late Knute Rockne's pep talks to his Notre Dame gridironers. They heard it, over the phonograph and via a tiny oscillator through the head bones to the inner ears.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHAIRMAN TAKES A BOW!

Greetings, salutations and all that. We're happy to be here.

Right now, our World's Fair Contests and other plans to expand the Club's activities find us up to our respective ears in work, so we'll beg off going into our dance for a spell.

However, we would like to emphasize our endeavor to continue making the services of the Round Table Club as vital to you, if possible, as you are to your theatre. That it is the medium of expression of over four thousand Club members, the country's representative showmen, is sufficient proof that the purposes of our organization are necessary in the successful conduct of this business.

Sincerely we ask this. Call upon us for any service that may make your lot happier, that will strengthen your worth, your prestige.

We are planning ahead. There are things to do. We note a more optimistic outlook throughout the industry and feel that the honest-to-Henry showman, the good manager is surely coming back into his own. We want to help further this long awaited move—"a consummation devoutly to be wished," and pledge our good right arm and both feet to this cause.

Many thanks for all the kind messages of welcome from our well-wishers in the field, home offices and studios and to those of you whom as yet we haven't met—we'll be seein' yuh!

STILL YOUR BUSINESS!

Against a chaotic background of bank closings, dark houses, cut salaries, unemployment and a host of kindred ills, one concrete fact stands out like the proverbial bandage on a sore thumb—

This is still your business!

In a generation of turmoil and economic headaches, your theatre still functions, as much the life blood of your community existence as the baker and the next door druggist.

The world must be entertained and its millions find that needed entertainment within the portals of a motion picture theatre. As necessary as the movies are to your townspeople, even more necessary are you, the manager, to the theatre.

Upon your shoulders rests the structure of the motion picture industry.

Figure it out for yourself. In the words of that popular statesman—"let's look at the record." And the record will clearly indicate that without the manager, untiring in his efforts, there would in fact be no motion picture industry.

Whence come the millions that build and maintain those gigantic studios? From where the golden flow that supplies those Beverly Hills forty-room mansions and the gold plated foreign cars?—yes, the actual bread and butter for the legions who live off the motion picture?

Where? Right from your box office, mister, and you are the bird who makes possible that box office. You, the manager who opens the safe, gets the change from the bank, makes ready the tickets, sees that the house is clean, the lights on, every employee at his post.

And yours is the finger that buzzes the cashier to start selling and the booth to start grinding.

The greatest box office idea, the smartest ad, the natural front page story are not worth a hoot in a haystack unless you work them out to fit your needs and run yourself ragged to plant them where they will do the most good.

Studio executives, stars, directors, cameramen, division managers, home office advertising managers, branch sales managers, film salesmen, operators, ushers, cashiers, porters, doormen—they all wait on you. For your OK and yours only starts that precious stream of dimes and quarters into your box office that makes it possible for the industry to survive.

And if you can bring yourself to see it in that light, you'll look better, sleep better, work better and find new strength to battle against the devilments and harassments that beset the manager's job. For in spite of hell and high water—this is still your business!

FREE WORLD'S FAIR TRIPS

On the following two pages, we give you all the details and dope on the summer awards for July showmanship, the contest sponsored by the Club in which live wire managers will be given one week all-expense trips to the Chicago World's Fair. Every manager, man and woman, in the United States and Canada is eligible for these grand prizes—every manager everywhere should enter. For the first time, to our knowledge, the film companies are combining to reward the diligent, conscientious, ever-working manager by making possible these trips at no expense to you. By their very generosity these film companies challenge your showmanship.

Let's show 'em.

PICTURE COMPANIES OFFER MANAGERS FREE TRIPS TO WORLD'S FAIR

Round Table Club Sponsors Contest for Best July Exploitation Campaigns; Fox, MGM, Monogram, Paramount, Radio, United Artists and Warners Will Pay All Expenses for Seven Days

by A-MIKE VOGEL

HOW would you like a real de luxe vacation? Five colossal days and nights in Chicago. How would you like to see the Century of Progress Exposition, the greatest World's Fair yet? How would you like to go places and do things—see the Chicago Cubs and White Sox play big league ball? Or would you prefer to golf on a sporty course, swim in Lake Michigan and wind up the day visiting the big theatres, and perhaps a snappy night club?

And all your expenses paid!

Is that sweet music—not too bad, what?

Well, that's the big vacation prize that will be awarded to seven hustlin' hot-foot never-stop showmen managers, with the film companies playing "papa".

Yes, it's so. And are we pleased purple to announce this news? That in cooperation with the following leading producers, Fox, MGM, Monogram, Paramount, Radio, United Artists and Warner Brothers, the Managers' Round Table Club now sponsors a Managers Prize Contest for the best July exploitation campaigns.

And what awards!

Seven one week all-expense trips to the World's Fair, the biggest show on earth. Two days for travel and five never to be forgotten days and nights in Chicago.

Check—

- ✓ Contest opens July 1.
- ✓ Closes July 31. (All entries must be delivered or mailed before midnight, July 31).
- ✓ Winners will be announced in Motion Picture Herald, August 12.
- ✓ Prizes: Seven one-week, round-trip, all-expense trips to Chicago World's Fair.
- ✓ Given by Fox, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Monogram, Paramount, Radio, United Artists and Warner Brothers.
- ✓ One prize by each company for best exploitation campaign on any one picture of that company's product played in July.
- ✓ Every manager, man or woman, in the United States and Canada eligible.
- ✓ Non-members of the Round Table Club included.

Each of the seven above mentioned film companies is giving one award for the best campaign on any one picture of that company's product played in July.

But that doesn't mean you are confined to the product of one company or any one picture of that product. In fact, you may send in a campaign on every picture you play during the month. The more the merrier.

Every manager, man and woman, in the United States and Canada is invited to enter—urged to enter. Whether your theatre is a big capacity de luxer, neighborhood house or small towner; whether you operate just two nights a week or are open seven days a week, you are eligible.

Every entrant will receive the same consideration.

Don't get the idea that the judges will consider only the big first-run campaigns. Absolutely not! Third-runs will get the same break as the premier showings. It isn't what picture you play—it's what you do with it, that counts in the final scoring.

EVERY THEATRE MANAGER IN U. S. AND CANADA ELIGIBLE FOR AWARDS

The manager with the tiny advertising budget who promotes costless and inexpensive exploitation will run "neck and neck" with the lad who shoots the bankroll. It isn't what you spend—it's what you get in exchange for every advertising dollar you lay on the line.

The contest opens on July 1, so you have a full week now to sit down and line up your exploitation possibilities to make sure you're off the mark with the opening gun.

Study your bookings carefully. Select those pictures on which you expect to concentrate. As no doubt you expect to enter campaigns on more than one picture, diversify your ideas to insure yourself "blanket coverage" over your bookings of the entire month.

Unusual newspaper stories, contests and theatre ads, co-op pages, classified page hookups, novel street stunts, public and high school tieups, lunch and civic club ideas, merchant cooperation and window displays, novel lobbies, special "days," benefits, local stage shows, and so on, are just a few of the many box office bell ringers that livewire managers will utilize to waft them off to Chicago on that golden cloud.

And be sure—and this is a big must—to send in the "evidence" with every campaign. To qualify for the contest, in addition to a detailed account of your campaign, you must forward tear sheets on all newspaper ads, stories, contests and publicity stunts; photographs of window displays, street stunts, special lobbies, parades, local stage shows, and so forth; special heralds, throwaways, door knob hangers, mailing pieces, etc. and etc.

This doesn't mean that you have to use all the foregoing in your campaigns in order to win, but whatever you do put over, be sure, be sure to send along the visual evidence.

And this is important. Don't wait until the end of the month to send everything in at once. Mail your campaigns immediately, for otherwise the judges will be swamped with entries and that might hold up the final judging. You don't want that to happen!

Double-Check

- √ √ Entries must be forwarded as soon as each campaign is completed.
- √ √ Photos, tear sheets, heralds, programs, and so on, must accompany story of campaign.
- √ √ Manager's name and theatre must appear on all campaign material.
- √ √ Judges: Gabe Yorke (Fox), Si Seadler (Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer), Mike Simmons (Monogram), Robt. M. Gillham (Paramount), Robert F. Sisk (Radio), Monroe Greenthal (United Artists), S. Chas. Einfeld (Warner Bros.), A-Mike Vogel, Chairman of Round Table Club.
- √ √ All entries must be forwarded to: Round Table — Producers World's Fair Managers' Contest, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

And if you can stand for another "important"—be sure to include your name and theatre on every thing you send in. That's very imp—well, necessary.

So polish up those ideas you've been saving for the right spot. This is the spot. Try to get in as many different and novel angles as possible. They don't have to be original (what is?).

So come on, gang. Give it the gun. Everybody's in, and that of course includes non-members of the Club as well. Look over your bookings right now. Strengthen your shows wherever possible. Get that supercharger working on the old beano.

It's a test of real showmanship and July is the month to challenge your ability, initiative and agility.

The rewards are worthwhile. Imagine seven big days to do as you please. Seven days and nights of good times of every kind. One hundred and eight hours to forget your worries, and relax.

A week you will remember with pleasure as long as you live.

The time of your life and it doesn't cost a dismal dime!

Contest opens July 1. Closes at midnight July 31. Winners announced in the Herald, issue of August 12.

Judges: Gabe Yorke (Fox), Si Seadler (Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer), Mike Simmons (Monogram), Robert M. Gillham (Paramount), Robert F. Sisk (Radio), Monroe Greenthal (United Artists), S. Charles Einfeld (Warner Brothers), and A-Mike Vogel, Chairman of the Managers Round Table Club.

These advertising executives have pledged themselves to render every possible aid to help you put this over. The companies they represent are right with you from the opening gun to make this the biggest contest of its kind.

Be ready July 1!

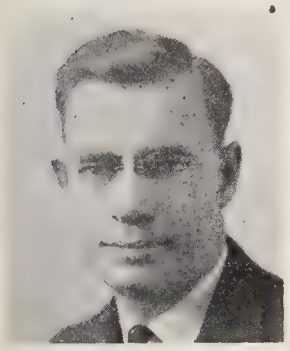
THE GUEST EDITORIAL



"A HAPPY ENDING"

by FRED HINDS

Owner, Strand Theatre, Whitewater, Wis.

Fred Hinds, is a well-known contributor to the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB and his message as guest editor this week should be of interest to our thousands of members and readers. Fred's opinion is regarded highly by exhibitors all over the United States, who follow his comments in our "What the Picture Did For Me" Department. Again the Club extends a standing invitation to all members to use this and all other pages of this section to express their views on subjects of showbusiness.

No theatre can be more successful than the product it purveys to the public. In the final analysis, screenfare dictates in the principal measure the number of patrons who will or who will not give their support.

Judicious advertising will sell good pictures. All the advertising in the world will not sell poor pictures—often. Upon the combined decision of the first-night clientele rests the success or failure of the feature for the remainder of the run. A responsibility of the greatest import is placed on the producer of motion pictures. Not only do the returns from his huge investment depend upon him, but every one of the millions invested in theatres are no less dependent on his production decisions. Current economic conditions have already forced the majority of producer-owned theatres to the wall. The independents are struggling onward, without profit, merely because they are better managed.

THE STUDIOS

It is probable the studios have never striven more valiantly to satisfy the fickle public than this season. It is also probable they have never succeeded better—with one exception. UNHAPPY ENDINGS! Twenty years ago theatre patrons would not accept unhappy endings. Ten years ago they would not accept unhappy endings. TODAY they will not accept unhappy endings. They NEVER will accept unhappy endings!

UNHAPPY ENDINGS

In rapid succession we have played "Son-Daughter," "Back Street," "Payment Deferred," "I Am a Fugitive," "Strange Interlude," "Silver Dollar," "Madame Butterfly," "A Farewell to Arms," "Sign of the Cross," "Rasputin and the Empress," "Central Airport," "The White Sister," "Hell Below," "Frisco Jenny," "Island of Lost Souls"—just to mention a few. Every one had an unhappy ending. Several of these subjects would have been improved but little with happy endings; but the majority are splendid pictures, the box-office possibilities of which were immeasurably harmed by the inevitable "bad taste." Some of the features quoted did a rather good business; but the point is they would have done a much better gross with the time-honored finish.

THEATRE RESPONSIBILITY

It is indeed a queer coincidence that this deluge of unhappy subjects should occur this season. People who are dejected almost beyond human endurance can hardly be expected to pay out what remaining money they may have for the purpose of becoming depressed further. More than that, the theatre has a certain, definite, civic responsibility. One could scarcely claim the persistent presentation of "agony" subjects is a correct discharge of this responsibility. Fundamentally, the most acute reaction is felt in a very practical way—at the box-office. Since most motion pictures are adaptations of well known novels or plays, prospective patrons are already aware of the subject matter. Thus do unhappy endings harm even the first night. The fact that Americans will accept an unhappy ending in a book and turn from it on the screen is subject for thought. Records of book sales and theatre statements of receipts, nevertheless, establish this fact.

Transversely, we find screen narratives of the lighter vein not only producing the more enviable financial returns, but what is equally as important, sending our people away with smiles on their faces. Witness such current examples as "State Fair," "Forty-second Street," "The Kid From Spain."

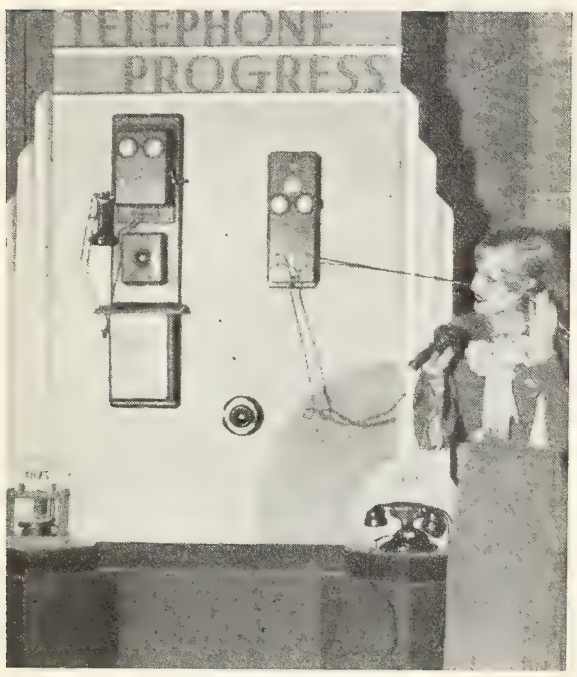
Perhaps eighty per cent. of this season's decrease in theatre attendance is due to causes beyond our control. There is, however, no reason why the other twenty per cent. should not be remedied within our own ranks.



"WORLD'S FAIR WEEK" AT ORIGINAL ROXY HONEY OF AN IDEA

He couldn't take his theatre to Chicago, so he brought the World's Fair to the original Roxy, did Morris Kinzler, perpetual motion ad chief of that New York playhouse, and so successful was his "World's Fair Week" that we endorse it vigorously as a stunt to pull right now for more business.

With the cooperation of Irving Lesser, Managing Director, Kinzler secured from the New York office of the Chicago Fair, scaled down replicas of many Exposition buildings and sixty large photos of other points of interest there.

Then he contacted organizations who have displays at the Chicago Fair, and secured from them like exhibits for the Roxy. These contacts came so willingly that almost over night Kinzler had enough stuff to put the show over.

Among the displays were those of automobile manufacturers, railroads, aeroplanes,

Calling the Boy Friend

telephone (illustrated below), electric and gas exhibits; candy, soap and stamp companies; newspapers, magazines and books. These were divided into separate groups under such headlines as "Travel and Transport," "Communications," "Arts and Crafts," etc.

Another highlight was the exhibit of native handcrafts from more than thirty nations of the world secured from the local Consuls of these countries and placed in the mezzanine, which for the occasion was called "International Hall."

During the week different nationalities, such as Greek, Russian, Italian, Polish, sponsored native entertainment on the Roxy stage at no cost to the theatre. On each night the theatre was decorated with the different flags of these countries, and advertising in the local foreign press called attention to these occasions.

Kinzler opened "Fair Week" with formal ceremonies at which the New York Police Commissioner and Howard S. Cullman, Commissioner of the Port of New York officiated. The house staff was instructed in the nature of each exhibit under the direction of House Manager Edward J. Burke.

A registry book which patrons were invited to sign totaled 18,000 names at the end of the week. School children were given reduced rates during the week, and thousands attended.

Special trailers and other advertising was used for three weeks in advance, and during the "Fair" week the exterior and interior of the theatre were decorated with flags of all nations.

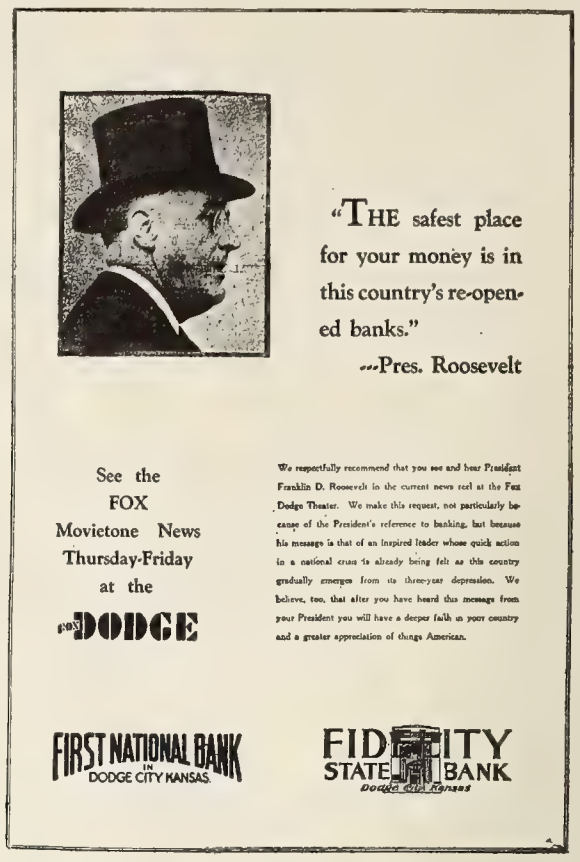
Kinzler reports that the increased business was surprising during one of the year's hottest weeks, and that the theatre got off the "nut" by having exhibitors paying for all transportation and installation.

Morris is kind enough to invite requests for further information from other managers who want to put on a "Fair" week, and for this purpose he is printing a detailed account on how he promoted his exhibits.

So go to it, as it sure is a honey of an idea, and a deep bow to Morris for one of the best executed campaigns of recent weeks.

BEER AND PRETZELS JUST TWO OF MANY BOUCHER CONTACTS

Back in Hagerstown, Maryland, city manager Frank Boucher, pioneer Round Table member, continues to keep the town show conscious by his work at the Maryland Theatre.



And when Frank landed a picture like "What, No Beer?" it was the most natural thing for him to tie-up with a local brewery for a supply of the amber fluid and then grab off a flock of pretzels. The two products thus obtained were then given free to patrons of the theatre as they entered the lobby to witness the picture playing the house.

But Frank also had another use for the pretzels. In glassine envelopes, he placed a couple of them, and then had two or three pretty girls, costumed, hand out the envelopes, which contained a plug on the picture. The girls covered the town pretty thoroughly.

Boucher is an artist at tie-ups. He grabs them, by dint of hard work, wherever he goes, and recently he effected a contact with a local candy store whereby the establishment printed up a number of bags containing plugs on the picture and a store plug. In one corner of the bag was a box stating that if an imprinted number corresponded with that of one on a list posted in front of the store, the holder would be given a free ticket to the theatre.

Frank worked this gag with a number of merchants and since it is one that is easily adaptable to whatever you might have to sell, why not give it a chance in your position.

TIMELY PROMOTION!

Above is a reproduction of a timely cooperative ad promoted in connection with the showing of a Movietone News containing President Roosevelt's address on the banking situation. Jay Wooten, manager of the Fox-Dodge, Dodge City, Kansas, is the live-wire showman who put over the deal. Two banks bore entire expense of the ad, which brought extra dollars to the box office.

FREE RADIO SCRIPT ON "SAMARANG" SURE FIRE ADVANCE PLUG

The growing number of exhibitors who advertise their shows on the air will welcome the complete fifteen-minute radio script on "Samarang," just gotten out by Hal Horne and Monroe Greenthal, of U. A.

These boys, alive to every box office possibility, sold the idea originally to one of New York's big stores which sponsored the broadcast over a leading station.

It went over so well that U. A. has printed up a lot of copies, neatly bound and free to all exhibs. playing the picture. The script is complete, including cast, announcements, and even a contest angle at the end. This is good box office for advance plugging.

"FOUR ACES" STUNT GREAT; NEW TWIST TO PHONE TEASER

In this case "Four Aces" beat a Royal Flush, for Harry Botwick, enterprising manager of the Paramount Theatre in Rutland, Vermont, has designed a gag which bids fair to become popular among Club members.

The gag is called "Four Aces."

This stunt was used when Botwick secured four entertainment bits which he thought were out of the ordinary, to wit: a corking feature, a Bing Crosby short, a Laurel and Hardy comedy, and a Technicolor cartoon.

To plug this show, Botwick a few days in advance ran teasers in the newspapers to the effect: "Four Aces Are Coming." An advance trailer heralded the show's arrival. Then, he made up a very effective display by using ordinary playing cards and four Jumbo cards (the big ones shown in the photo). On the big pasteboards, he enumerated the various film subects. The newspaper ad, too, carried out the "Four Aces" tone. The result: tremendous.

Harry's Display

Now here's a stunt that you, too, can work to fine advantage. If you like, it might also be possible for you to cut-out and make your own playing cards. Many showmen will doubtless do this. However, we present the angle, through Botwick's courtesy, and pass it along. You can act upon it if it will fit your particular position.

Then another of Botwick's stunts to result in considerable cash business was used on "Prosperity," when he adopted the phone gag often used by Club showmen, but gave it another twist. Instead of advertising in the paper "Call 2571," he put out more than a thousand window cards, carrying nothing but the teaser phone number. More than eight hundred phone calls were received within two days. Botwick further enhanced the scope of his stunt by having theatre employees hand out, on the streets, visiting cards carrying only the phone copy.

A peculiar aftermath noticed by Botwick as a result of the phone calls has been that the phone calls to the theatre regarding the attraction, which usually numbered somewhere between ten and twelve, have been doubled.

This showman is certainly showing plenty of style on the old apple up there in Rutland and we are happy to be able to pass his efforts along to his fellow members and showmen. Keep it up, Harry, and let's have some more.

ODLUM AT IT AGAIN!

G. B. Odlum, formerly at the Colonial Theatre in Elmira, New York, is now making his headquarters at the Palace in Canton, Ohio. "G. B." certainly needs no introduction to us, he's an old-time live-wire showman, a "guest" editor, a steady contributor to these pages and a great fellow. All the luck in the world, "G. B."; we're rootin' for you.

ED DOREL EMPLOYED NUMBER OF STUNTS TO GOOD ADVANTAGE

Making good his promise to let fellow showmen know what has been going on in showbusiness out in his town, E. D. Dorrel, recently elected a member of the Round Table Club, sends along a brief description of a few stunts he used to boost box office trade.

One of the best stunts employed to date turned out to be the "One Cent Sale" idea, which consisted of giving two admissions for the price of one plus one cent. It happened that the local drug concern had on hand a lot of banners, price tags and other "One Cent" advertising matter and this material was obtained and used by Dorrel to excellent advantage. He also used the drug store's ad cuts by routing out all drug copy. This gag tripled average gross, saved considerable advertising expenses and rated a front page story in the local paper on account of its novelty.

In connection with "Conquerors" an "Old Settlers Reunion" was productive of a lot of publicity and good will. The newspaper tied-in with the affair and another deal with a local auto agency provided transportation of the old folks to the theatre. The newspaper arranged to have a hostess in the lobby to pick up notes about the early days and a number of old fashioned dresses and hats were secured for a lobby display. The fact that the picture's story concerned pioneer days in Nebraska provided additional appeal.

When his town suffered the loss of one of its largest department stores a short time ago Dorrel was right on the job to place a message before the crowds who visited the ruins. With a Bargain Matinee spotted the day after the fire he had a banner painted with copy, "The Fire Is Out and the Big Bargain Matinee at the Fox Is On". Matinee trade was excellent.

Dorrel's Kiddie Club is also functioning in a most satisfactory manner. The youngsters meet every Saturday afternoon about 45 minutes before the regular matinee goes on, during which the Club program is presented. He has a tie-up with the town's largest bakery to sponsor the Club and provide cookies, doughnuts and weekly awards for pop-drinking and pie-eating stunts. Three acts of vaudeville are also put on each week with winner judged by applause and permitted to appear in the grand elimination at the end of 10 weeks, at which time the winner became entitled to a trip to Omaha with all expenses paid by theatre and baker.

He also has the baker tied-in with the birthday card index and when one of the youngster's birthday is due he or she is sent two free admissions and a birthday cake. All members wear Fox Theatre buttons and talk Fox entertainment wherever they happen to be. Saturday matinee trade has been doubled since the Club was started.

If any of Dorrel's fellow showmen happen to have one of those old ad clocks around they might put it to work same as Dorrel has done. He soaked off all the old ads from the glass slides and lettered on the current program. These are then projected on a small screen atop the marquee. As there are 12 slides on the wheels and the clock mechanism changes them every minute, it is possible to flash the complete program, cast, shorts and everything every 12 minutes.

Thanks to Dorrel for the above suggestions and we're sure they'll be appreciated by his fellow Round Tablers. He's starting off well for a new member and we hope he will keep up the good work. More about his work at a later date.

Good Promotional Copy

Harry Maizlich, exploitation manager for the Warner Los Angeles Hollywood and Downtown Theatres, grabbed off a free three column ad for both theatres on "The Working Man," in every Los Angeles newspaper by staging a pre-view of the picture for the Ad Man Club of L. A. He then sold the papers the idea of giving promotional space to what Arliss had to say in the pix about advertising. The result was a three column ad ten inches deep written by an advertising agency and carried free in all L. A. papers.

In the Cutting Room

advance outlines of productions nearing completion

ONE SUNDAY AFTERNOON

Paramount

A romantic husband-wife love story which develops a dramatic tinge. The story is based on a stage play by James Hagan which enjoyed notable metropolitan success and the screen play is by Grover Jones and William Slavens McNutt. Direction is by Stephen Roberts, whose recent credits include "The Story of Temple Drake," "Night of June 13th" and "Lady And Gent." Photography is by Victor Milner.

In the story Gary Cooper is a hard-boiled but soft-hearted guy. The prologue establishes that Neil Hamilton wrecked Cooper's life and sent him to jail. Upon release, Cooper, now a dentist, has Hamilton in the chair and plans to kill him. The story flashes back to incidents that build up the drama.

Fay Wray is co-starred with Cooper. The picture introduces another new screen personality, Frances Fuller, who recently appeared in the stage version of "Animal Kingdom." She looks to be an embryonic composite of Lillian Gish and Helen Hayes, and, measuring up to her part, should provide a new name to talk about. Neil Hamilton is the heavy and the comedy relief is in the hands of Roscoe Karns.

ARIZONA TO BROADWAY

Fox

Contrary to the title tone, "Arizona To Broadway" is not a Western. Rather a colorful comedy romance, the yarn deals with a confidence man who outslicks the yokels as well as rival gold-brick artists. Hurly-burly in atmosphere, the story romps across the country with James Dunn making suckers out of the natives as well as those with whom he is supposed to be in cahoots, notably Joan Bennett and Herbert Mundin. Landing on Broadway, the outfit take a gang of racketeers for front money for a stage show and the picture acquires a musical tinge, as well as becoming a little dramatic as the fleeced smart guys hold Bennett and Mundin hostages until Dunn comes through.

Besides the names mentioned, Sammy Cohen, Theodore Von Eltz, Merna Kennedy and Earle Fox have prominent roles, with such personalities as Ned Flynn and Ray West brought into the theatrical finale.

The story is by William Conselman and Henry Johnson and is directed by James Tinling. The story seems okay for the Dunn character and personality and Mundin's role should be productive of plenty of comedy.

SONG OF SONGS

Paramount-Mamoulian

Not a musical, rather a dramatic, romantic, sexy character study. The locale is Europe. The picture is based on a novel by Herman Sudermann and stage play by Edward Sheldon. The screen play was prepared by Leo Birinski and Samuel Hoffenstein. Photography is by Victor Milner.

With Rouben Mamoulian directing, "Song of Songs" is the first Marlene Dietrich picture made by Paramount without the association of Josef von Sternberg.

The story deals with the life of an exotic peasant girl, who after serving as model for a statue embarks on a scarlet career that plays hob with all whom she meets. Becoming a baroness, yet still beloved by the sculptor, who considers her statue his masterpiece and his love song to her, as well as by many others, the story is distinctly suited to the Dietrich screen character. Dialogue and action contain many opportunities for her to turn in a great performance. In addition to her straight work, she sings a couple of songs.

Appearing opposite the star in the role of the romantic sculptor is Brian Aherne, a newcomer to the screen. Has appeared in several stage plays, notably as Katherine Cornell's leading man. In addition, cast includes Lionel Atwill, Alison Skipworth, Hardie Albright and Helen Freeman.

THE POWER AND THE GLORY

Fox-Lasky

Radically departing from accepted practices in story telling screen treatment, the yarn is told in stirring dramatic and romantic highlights. Contrary to biographies, the story starts late in the central character's life and flashes back to related incidents of his career. Thus while continuity may seem to be sacrificed, the yarn is not episodic. Rather it is held together by a strong chain.

Through Ralph Morgan, "The Power And The Glory" traces the career of Spencer Tracy from boyhood to climax, his romance with Colleen Moore, who spurs him on to great accomplishments as a mighty railroad builder, stock market wrecker, man of iron. Hated by men, loved by women, he falls victim to the charms of Helen Vinson, after his first wife, who freed him, is killed. At the critical moment of his life, his second mate betrays him and the world he built crumbles in chaos.

The story is by Preston Sturgess. Direction is by William K. Howard, who made "The First Year" (Gaynor and Farrell) and "The Trial of Vivienne Ware," Jesse L. Lasky is producing.

Spencer Tracy has the leading role. Colleen Moore, making her re-entry into talking pictures, is the inspiring wife, who sacrificed her happiness to Tracy's glory. Morgan is Tracy's lifelong friend and Helen Vinson is the double-crossing second wife.

The picture should include strong production values on a par with Lasky's "Zoo In Budapest" and "Warrior's Husband."

MAMA LOVES PAPA

Paramount

A domestic comedy, set in a typical American city of today. Treatment is modern. The picture is based on a story by Keene Thompson and Douglas MacLean, who will be remembered as the producer of some hectic comedies in the silent days. The screen play is by Nunally Johnson, Saturday Evening Post humorist, and Arthur Kober, a combination of authors and scenarists indicating plenty of fun.

The story deals with the antics of a henpecked husband and his ultraforceful wife. Unable to manage his domestic affairs, the husband dabbles in politics and develops into quite a figure. Atmosphere and action give an impression similar to the old Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew types of comedies.

"Mama Loves Papa" (title subject to change) is being directed by Norman McLeod, who was the man behind the gun on "Monkey Business" and "Horsefeathers."

With Mary Boland, who clicked in "Evenings For Sale," and Charlie Ruggles costarred, the cast also includes Lilyan Tashman, George Barbier, Walter Catlett, Tom Ricketts and Frank Sheridan. Photography is by Gilbert Warrenton.

Beginning with this issue MOTION PICTURE HERALD will present periodically, as a new and additional service to the exhibitor, information on productions nearing completion, and in advance of the previews. No endeavor will be made to evaluate the picture, save as its box office merits may be anticipated from the facts presented concerning cast and aspects of the material. This preliminary report is intended to supplement, and not to supplant any part of THE HERALD'S rapid and prompt Hollywood showmen's reviews. In most instances these "In the Cutting Room" bulletins will appear from two weeks to a month before the picture is made available for screening in Hollywood. Many exhibitors have expressed a desire for such a service and there are many recent instances indicating that the speed with which pictures are now being pushed from the stage to the market can make these preliminary reports of decided value to showmen. It will be of interest to receive the comment and suggestions of exhibitors.—TERRY RAMSAYE

Roosevelt Film Shown On Coast in Record Time

Speeding news films of President Roosevelt's war debt speech to theatres of the nation, 43 air express shipments, with a total weight of 198 pounds, were rushed by RKO from the Leonia, N. J., plant of Consolidated Film Industries by Railway Express Agency, and were shown at the farthest west points on the Coast in the evening of the day following their dispatch by plane from Newark Airport, due to the new 21½ hour coast-to-coast air schedules.

Incidentally, the number of answers is, as usual, dropping down a bit as summer comes on.

On second thought, it is possible that continued failure to have your names listed as answering acceptably may, now that warm weather is upon us, be the cause of the drop-off. I note that few of those who have been even fairly successful have dropped. If that is true, my advice is to "stick." You are the ones who need this "school" most of all, as experience surely has shown you. Don't be quitters, men. Be stickers! In the end you will find yourselves to have been largely benefited.

We will listen to Dale Danielson on Section A. He says:

"The first thing I do after the film is in the projection room, is to see if the entire program checks with the film received. Next I line the film up in the order it is to be projected. Next, taking the first reel, I see that the reel is just what the reel band calls for, i.e., the correct band is on the correct reel. I glance at the external appearance of the reel and interior of case.

"Then I ascertain if the film has an exchange inspection seal. Paramount never uses an inspection seal however. In fact it isn't even sealed. I take particular notice of the leader, especially from footage number 8 on. That is where I thread. I exactly synchronize the leader, i.e. make exactly one foot footage number to footage number and exactly three feet between last number and picture. I either add or subtract film as is necessary. This I consider important as I thread exactly. This part completed, if I desire carefully to look at the reel it is placed on the motor driven rewind. This rewind is slow taking 9.14267 plus minutes per 1,000 feet of film. Besides an automatic stop I have an auxiliary switch that can be operated by the knee. I gently cup the film between my thumb and first finger. A ragged edge will be immediately evident. A loose splice is caught. In fact I inspect every splice, especially in some companies. There is a difference in splices by different exchanges.

"I notch places where film is split between margin and one sprocket hole. I frequently stop to note cleanliness of film, examine sound track, sprocket holes and for presence of scratches or other faults. At the tail end I look at the standard cues (the projectionist's greatest godsend), making sure there are at least nine or ten frames between the first of the last cue marks and picture ending and that there are eleven feet between cues. I hope and pray then that this reel will run the gauntlet in projection."

As to section B, Messrs. Evans and Rau tell it all in a few words. They say:

"To remove the emulsion from film, soak the film in a bucket of warm water in which a large double handful of washing soda has been dissolved. Afterward wash the film in clean, warm water."

Which really is all there is to it. Let the film soak for a while. The soda will affect nothing except the emulsion.

As to section C, some hundreds all said exactly the same thing in different words, namely: "Since every projector used in theatres passes exactly one foot of film to each revolution of the crank shaft, it is only necessary to run film through the projector and count the revolutions of the crank shaft, or what once was the crank shaft. Each revolution equals one foot of film."

D. It seems that in order to be able to answer the question, several obtained from the Eastman Company a booklet telling how to store film, and that is enterprise. However, while you will think I have a lot of nerve differing with the Eastman Company on a subject of this sort, I nevertheless do, on one point, namely, Eastman Company recommends mounting the film on large hub reel that would be comparatively free from oxidation.

Now why any reel at all? Personally I would wind the film on a large hub and remove the hub, or on a large wooden hub and leave the hub in if it is preferred, but with no metallic reel sides.

The advice otherwise is good: "(a) The film should be moist but not excessively so. (b) It should be wrapped in chemically pure black paper. (c) Placed in tin plate cans, one reel or roll of film to the can only, and (d) kept comparatively cool, say around 40 to 45 degrees Fahrenheit. (e) If the film is kept in storage for a long period of time it should be inspected each alternate year, first, however, having brought the film to normal temperature throughout, in order to avoid condensure of moisture with possible softening of emulsion."

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified.

WHEN you use that phrase, the chances are your picture was made on Eastman Super-sensitive Panchromatic Negative ... with the ingenious gray backing to give it that extra ounce of brilliance ... that pleasing anti-glare effect ... "What box-office" usually implies, among other things, the final measure of photographic quality which only this Eastman film can contribute to a picture's success. Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, New York. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)
